THE BANK FAILURE.

The failure of the Peoples' Bank continues to be the principal subject of interest here. Many conflicting reports have been in circulation during the past week, some of which may be true, and others may be taken with several grains of allowance. Col. Fitzsimmons himself is still in Central America, or upon his way home, and knows nothing about the failure unless he has been informed by telegraph.

Mr. Dutton, the cashier, has lived in Tecumseh from his boyhood and has the confidence of everyone. No one seems to impute any dishonesty to him. It has been known that they were transacting business on a short capital, but they have secured a good custom from the fact that people placed confidence in their business integrity and personal honesty. Several depositors have sold their claims for fifty cents on the dollar, and we understand that one responsible firm in town offers to purchase all claims presented at that figure. It has been reported that the bank officers have offered dollar for dollar if the creditors would wait one year. This report has no foundation, in fact. Neither the bank officers nor the assignee have made any authoritative statement whatever as to what they could do. The assignee is now engaged in making a detailed schedule of the assets and liabilities to file with the county clerk. As soon as that is completed, the public can make an intelligent estimate of the actual condition of the bank's affairs. Until then all theories about the failure and its causes are mere guess work. An appended card from the assignee will give an approximate idea of the present situation.

Card.

To the creditors of Peoples' Bank of W. C. Fitzsimmons & Co.:

As a result of what examination I have thus far been able to give to the condition of the bank's affairs, I approximate the following, viz:

Liabilities	$49,297 17
To meet this, nominal assets	$41,271 05
Of these probably available	29,410 19

These assets include property, held in name of Col. Fitzsimmons, included in assignment, at an estimated value of $10,000.

COUNTY CLIPPINGS.

The circuit court is in session this week at Adrian.

Hon. David Carpenter, of Blissfield, is dangerously ill.

Hudson's old law mill in Deerfield, which was built in 1837, is being torn down.

The Episcopal church of Clinton have engaged a new minister, Rev. Isaac Frey, of Coffeyville, Kansas.

Mrs. Jane Knight of Blissfield has received a pension certificate for $1830 arrears, and an allowance of $8.00 per month in the future.

Blissfield Advance: Neighbors of the Germany and Nelson families, on the north town line, are frequently regaled with choice bits of family history during the many "flare-ups" between them. Last Sunday morning a quarrel of an hour's duration was enjoyed by the outsiders, who speak of it as very disgraceful.

Hudson Post: Mr. Wm. A. Whitney, our veteran manufacturer, makes an offer to the citizens that they can well afford to accept. Its favorable reception involves the addition to his business of the manufacture of wheels and—tell it not in Adrian—wheelbarrows.

The postoffice war of Adrian is waxing decidedly warm. The contest is confined entirely to the faithful however, and the Gentiles have only to look on and smile. Dr. Rynd, H. A. Colyin and the Times favor a new location on South Main street, while W. S. Wilcox, Mayor Navin, and others favor keeping the office in Masonic Temple where it now is.

Morenci Observer; A report comes to us that a lot of unruly boys in the Blanchard district managed by persistent rowdyism, to break up the school and send the teacher adrift. The better class of citizens there owe it to the good name of the district to see to it hereafter that officers are appointed who have the good sense and moral courage to stand by the teacher, and not have the usefulness of their school destroyed by rowdyism.

TO THE AFFLICTED.

Since the introduction of Kellogg's Columbian Oil it has made more permanent cures and given better satisfaction on Kidney Complaints and Rheumatism than any known remedy. Its continued series of wonderful cures in all climates has made it known as a safe and reliable agent to employ against all aches and pains, which are the forerunners of more serious disorders. It acts speedily and surely, always relieving suffering and often saving life. The protection it affords by its timely use on rheumatism, Kidney affection, and all aches and pains, wounds, cramping pains, cholera morbus, diarrhoea, coughs, colds, catarrh, and disorders among children, makes it an invaluable remedy to be kept always on hand in every home. No person can afford to be without it, and those who have once used it never will. It is absolutely certain in its remedial effects, and will always cure when cures are possible. Call at C. A. Wright & Co.'s and get a memorandum book giving more full details of the curative properties of this wonderful medicine.

"Five Months Abroad"

is the title of what promises to be one of the most popular books of European travel yet published in this country. It is the work of James E. Scripps founder and principal manager of the Detroit Evening News. Mr. Scripps spent last summer in traveling in the most interesting parts of the old country, visiting its most famous cathedrals, ruins, etc., and if any one is capable of telling, in a plain and comprehensive manner, his experiences and what he saw we think Mr. Scripps is. It is a book that will interest every intelligent person, as it contains a vast amount of general information upon the history, biography, traditions, art, architecture, and social and political conditions of Europe. The perusal of this work can hardly fail to stimulate a desire for further knowledge, and we think it is a book that will greatly interest both old and young. It is published by the well-known publishing house of F. B. Dickerson & Co., Detroit, and is sold only by subscription. We predict for it an immense sale, especially in Michigan, and we think the agent who is first in the field will find it a "bonanza."

OUR business transactions with the enterprising firm of Lord & Thomas, newspaper advertising agents, of Chicago, enable us to bear testimony to their liberality, and fair dealing with the newspaper fraternity as well as with advertisers. Notwithstanding the vast amount of business transacted by this firm, they pay bills very promptly as they mature.

In Memory of Noyes A. Darling.

Mr. Darling was a prominent member of the Student's Christian Association, and the following resolutions passed by them have been sent to us for publication:

WHEREAS, God in his providence has, by the hand of death, removed from our midst one of our number, in the person of Noyes A. Darling, and

WHEREAS, Our brother was known among us by his earnest efforts for good, his modest and unassuming bearing, and his genuine christian life and character; therefore

Resolved, That we bow in humble submission to this dispensation of Providence, knowing that He doeth all things well, and

Resolved, That we herein express our deep sorrow at the loss of one of our faithful members, and a vice president of our association, and

Resolved, That we extend our tender sympathy to the family and friends of our departed brother in this, their great sorrow, and commend them to the consolation of Him who chasteneth whom He loveth, also

Resolved, That these resolutions be entered upon the minutes of the association, a copy sent to the family of the deceased, and a copy to the Tecumseh HERALD for publication.

WELL ENOUGH IN THEIR PLACE, BUT NOT IN OUR PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

When a man of sense prepares to take a journey he does not fill his trunk with a little shabby linen and a great many cheap scarf-pins and sleasily embroidered slippers. On the contrary, he packs in reasonable compass a goodly number of serviceable garments in excellent repair, and goes forth neat, wholesome and of an equal mind, appropriately fitted for his journey and his work.

This man goes on his journey, and his children stay behind, for the famous public school of their ward or district demand their presence, and the absent father's orders are strict, they must be prepared for the greater journey of life and its business. Week after week their young heads are stuffed with a little information and a great number of subjects—astronomy, physiology, drawing, vocal music, German, natural philosophy, etymology, grammar—in short, plenty of cheap scarf-pins and slippers. The sturdy, every-day needs of serviceable arithmetic (not glib memorized sets of figures), of accurate and brightly intelligent reading, of easy writing and correct speech, fare badly among such a host of studies. They are brushed over hastily and by rote, like all the others, and shabby enough they are as they are packed away among the scarf-pins for that long and busy journey. The precise and intimate knowledge of common branches without which no man can be decently equipped for work of any sort, is discarded for what Mr. Charles Francis Adams aptly calls "veneer and sham."

The experiment of "smatter" has been sufficiently tried in American public schools. It is a sort of decorative art, of which we have had a great deal too much.

There is in most of our city schools a vast expenditure to little purpose. While many papers have no mind to preach economy in this direction, they have a resonable desire to see that this money used with common sense and honest discretion. There is something too much of drawing and vocal music, of 'ology about the school course. The frantic enthusiasm about drawing which animated school boards and superintendents several years ago is getting cooler and cooler; in many places the number of drawing teachers has been reduced, and a pitiful effort is made to train the regular teachers to the work. This enthusiasm unfortunately has cost a great deal of money, and the chief practical result has been that a number of stiff drawings were exhibited at the Centennial celebration at Philadelphia. Whatever good in the way of handiwork this study in our schools has accomplished, could have been brought about in a wiser way. The "training of the eye" and "cultivation of the tastes" so much talked about by some of the people who make their living by teaching drawing in these public schools, have in all truth and sadness, never yet been discerned. To use the language of common sense, this is trash. The training to read with intelligence and appreciative understanding one famous masterpiece of the English language would be worth in way of cultivation a thousand of these drawing lessons.

Possibly one pupil in five hundred has some impulse given to his hand in drawing which may make him in after life a better mechanic. The other 499 have meanwhile acquired no deftness which will assist them on the farm, in the counting-room, or in the kitchen. Why should all these be wrongly biased for the sake of one? It is not unlikely that the solution of the much-discussed problem of industrial education lies in the establishment of well-equipped and thoroughly-taught free technical schools in every city and large town. The cutting off of the superfluities which now only lead to "veneer and sham" would save large sums which could be put to better use. To these schools could be sent those children who by natural bent belong therein. There is no danger but that sufficient time could be found both for an improved public-school course and a technical school course. That changes are no the way to be made in nearly every State. As our readers are aware, the door is ajar in the Boston primary schools—in that Boston, which, having tried all the "new ideas" in education, is now settling upon that most excellent one, the "Quincy plan." Hereafter the little people of that great city are to be "taught," instead of being made to memorise and gabble by platoons. They are to acquire not a glittering varnish, but a nimble intelligence which will take them out into the world in good case, and give to their minds the same comfort and readiness which stout and well-fitting clothes give to their bodies.

Never Too Old to Learn.

Many people, after they have arrived at manhood or womanhood, hesitate to apply themselves to study, thinking that youth is the only period when it can be prosecuted successfully. Let them take courage after reading the following, from good authority:

It is a great mistake to suppose that little can be accomplished if a man has reached the age of thirty or forty years. Nine-tenths of our clever men have actually exhibited more vigor of intellect at fifty years of age than at forty. Franklin was forty when he began, in real earnest, the study of natural philosophy. The principal of one of the most flourishing colleges in America was a farm-servant until past the age when most students have completed their collegiate education. Sir Henry Spelman did not begin the study of science until he was between fifty and sixty years of age. Greek was the first foreign language which Cato, the celebrated Roman censor, acquired, and he did so in his old age. Alfieri, whose writing has caused a revolution in the dramatic literature of Italy, was left without a father in his infancy, and wasted his early years. John Ogilby, the author of poetical translations from Homer and Virgil, began the study of Latin, when about forty years of age, and Greek in his forty-fourth. Boccacio, one of the most illustrious writers that ever appeared in Italy, suffered nearly half of his life to pass without improvement. Handel was forty-eight before he published any of his great works. Dr. Thomas Arnold, of Rugby, learned German at forty, in order that he might read Niebuhr in the original."

A pure, wholesome distillation of witch hazel, American pine, Canada fir, marigold, clover blossoms, etc., fragrant with the healing essences of balsam and of pine. Sold by Sanford's Radical Cure for Catarrh. Complete treatment for $1.

Reading Aloud.

It is strange that in a country whose language is stored full of the choicest works of the human mind, and whose population is, as a whole, so well educated, reading aloud as a source of amusement and means of enjoyment is so little resorted to.

There are many families, even in book-loving New England—there are scores of families, we dare say—where a book or a chapter of a book is never read to the family circle from one end of the year to another. The individual members of the family read, but all reading done in the family is silent reading. Father has his paper; mother her text, Mary her novel; Johnny his story of wild adventures. Reading, there is enough of it; but each one reads for himself. There is no reading for the whole, and no grouping of the family into an audience for an evening's enjoyment, such as comes to people who hear a good bit of writing well read.

Only those who have visited in the families where the gift of reading was cultivated as a source of family enjoyment, and the custom of reading aloud to the family practiced, can imagine what a help and blessing to the family life such a habit is.

Music is well enough in its way, but its range of expression is far narrower than that of reading, and for that matter far less practical in its adaptation to the family wants.

Them too, singing requires an instrumental accompaniment, and a piano costs money and requires too much practice on the part of the performer to be available for the many. The art of reading well is easily acquired and cheaply taught, and the expression of literature are abundant and varied. If sorrow has fallen on the family, the needed antidote can be found in prose and poetry. If fun is called for, then fun can be had at the asking; for the language is full of humor so quaint and subtle that the bare recital of the authors words brings the point out and "sets the table in a roar." History, tragedy, comedy, wit, pathos and every spring at which the human mind loves to drink, can be opened, and the sweet waters be given freely to every one. How cozy those home readings may be made! Warmth, light, companionship, culture, happiness, are all included in them. Next to the impulse of love as a means of drawing families together is the influence of intellectual companionship. Cultivate this, good friends, and see how satisfactory will be the result.

The Results of Necessity.

What the ancients suffered for the want of knowledge in medical science can only be appreciated by contrasting the vast amount of suffering cured and pain alleviated in modern times, by the use of Swayne's Ointment for skin diseases. Its introduction was characterized by the necessary withdrawel of a score or more of illusive, quack nostrums, whose evil effects have left living monuments to denounce them. Thus is exemplified the proverb, Necessity is the mother of Invention.

GRANGE STORES.

It has always been a problem with the farmer how to dispense with the middle-man and secure to himself the profits accruing to the latter. Many years ago in the State of New York, co-operative stores were established where farmers could procure goods at ten per cent. advance on first cost.—These establishments were placed in the hands of men of mediocre ability, because they were satisfied with low salaries, conducted with small capital and usually located in out-of-the-way places to avoid competition. As a result, they gradually ceased to exist owing to the exhaustion of the original investment, and the lack of a sustaining trade. In this State, Grange stores have from time to time been established with similarly unsatisfactory results. The Grand Rapids Times has the following report to make of the one in that city: "The Grange store which was started here several years ago under seemingly brilliant auspices by the farmers has proved a failure and is to be discontinued. The institution has lost money for its backers since its inception. Starting with a capital stock of $3,000, it ends now with nothing to show for the investment. The stockholders met at Leppig's hall yesterday and decided to abandon the enterprise. The business of the house is to be wound up and a purchaser for the small stock on hand is now desired. The co-operative plan didn't pay. All the "agents" have been too "thrifty" for the staid farmers and stockholders have been called on, from time to time to "put up" for this enterprise." The concern proved an incubus that the stockholders were only too glad to be rid of.

STATE FAIR NOTES.

The officers and executive committee of the state agricultural society held their usual January meeting in Detroit, the new president, Henry Fralick, presiding. The latter has appointed the following committees, to wit:

On nominations—Messrs. Sterling, Cobb, Beckwith, Dean, Parsons, Reed, Angell, Butterfield and Gilbert.

On programs—Messrs. Cobb, Hyde, and Smith.

On receptions — Messrs. Parsons, Wells and Shoemaker.

On printing—Messrs. Dean, Sterling and Lessiter.

On finance—Messrs. Ball, Rising and Anderson.

On business—Messrs. Gilbert, Cobb, and Hyde.

On rules—Messrs. Parsons, Phillips and Burrington.

On transportation—Messrs. Sterling, Baxter and Webster.

On conference with Horticultural Society—Messrs. Parsons, Phillips and Wood.

In his address the retiring president demonstrated that the expense of holding a fair in any given place is much larger for the first year, and said the last Detroit fair cost the association $11,000 less than the first Detroit fair, being an average reduction of nearly $4,000 a year.

The Secretary stated that $9,809 had been paid for premiums in 1881, out of $12,688 offered. There is a cash balance in the society of $21,932.84, a trifle less than the balance of a year ago. The receipts during the year were as follows: Jackson subscriptions, $2,000; chairman business committee, 1880, $871.71; R. F. Johnstone's estate, $119.67; interest $395; chairman business committee, 1881, $3,166; membership certificates, $832; ground admissions, $19,695.50.

HEALTH OF THE STATE.

Reports recently received by the State Board of Health from seventy-four observers of diseases in different parts of the State, showed for the week ended Dec. 31, 1881, that rheumatism and erysipelas had increased, and that intermittent fever, diphtheria and typho-malarial fever decreased considerably in area of prevalence.—Small-pox was reported at Bay City, Detroit, Grand Rapids, Kalamazoo and Union City. The one new case in Grand Rapids was believed to have been brought from North Carolina.—The case at Union City was brought from Cincinnati. At Kalamazoo the disease was probably contracted by sorting paper rags. At all of the six localities from which small-pox was reported it was believed to be under the control of the local health authorities, being restricted by isolation of those sick or exposed to the disease, by vaccination and by disinfection, to the first case or cases which appeared.—If the local Boards of Health would act as promptly and carry out as thorough measures for the restriction and suppression of diphtheria and scarlet fever as they are anxious to enforce on the outbreak of small-pox, it is believed that scarlet fever and diphtheria might be nearly as well suppressed.

He that telleth thee thou art always wrong may be deceived, but he that says thou art always right is surely a liar.

Mr. William R. Seymour, of Columbus, O., writes: "I attended a course of lectures several winters ago at the Ohio Medical College of Cincinnati, O. There I was taught that Iron is a prominent element in the physical organism of mankind; without it life is an impossibility. A vast percentage of the diseases and premature deaths to which the race is subject, is caused, or at least made possible by a weakening of the body in consequence of a lack of Iron in the blood. Having suffered from ill-health, poor digestion and urinary troubles ever since I recovered from typhoid fever, complicated with malarial fever, I determined to give Iron a trial. From investigation I learned that Brown's Iron Bitters were the best, and that they did not blacken the teeth, so I concluded to make use of them. They acted like a charm. I never before felt so robust, hearty and strong."

AROUND THE COUNTY.

CLINTON.

Miss Cercie Muir has been sick for a few days past.

C. F. Field and family visited their old home in Manchester last Sabbath.

Misses Hessie Cupples and Sarah Swarthout, of Tecumseh, spent Sunday in Clinton.

Mrs. D. H. Davis returned last Wednesday from Dowagiac after an absence of nearly two months. She went only for a short time but the sickness of her mother necessarily prolonged his visit.

The meeting of the Reform Club held Monday evening in Freese's hall was enjoyed by the large audience present. The program consisting of vocal and instrumental music, readings, and recitations, and last but not least a lecture by Rev. G. W. Wilson was unusually good. But few such meetings are needed to establish a good reputation for such a society.

We hear that D. H. Silvers, our Live Clothier, talks of leaving us and settling in Manchester about the middle of March. While we regret that we must lose him we wish him success equal to his most sanguine expectations in the broader field he has chosen. He has taken a large amount of clothing to Milan this week, for the purpose of lessening his stock on hand before his removal to Manchester.

A little incident which occurred at the Silvers house last week perhaps is not unworthy of mention. A married gentleman(?) from Detroit, who had been working in Brown's hardware, had been boarding at the above named house. Several times while at meals he had attempted to make love to one of the dining room girls, and on one occasion he gave her a note which she threw unread into the fire. She reported his conduct to the landlord who charged her upon similar action to slap his mouth. She had occasion to put his advice into practice, which she did with so much vehemence that the immediate attention of the rest of the boarders was attracted and the cheers and laughter that followed showed that her pluck was appreciated.

ROME.

The all absorbing topic of the Romans for the past two weeks and at present is elocution. Through the instrumentality of R. P. Taylor, our harness maker, an old friend of his, the celebrated elocutionist, Mrs. R.B. McCann, of Ohio, came to this place and organized a class about two weeks ago. The project has prospered beyond our anticipations as there are in the class now about 50 members. Class meets twice a week, Monday and Wednesday evenings. Mrs. McCann is not only a good elocutionist but also a good scholar and one of the best of teachers. Messrs. Bates are very kind to give the class the use of their hall.

On Saturday eve. last, the Grangers held a meeting, it being the first one this winter, to see whether they throw up the sponge or not. They decided to continue business and not throw up the sponge, as their financial condition is better now than it has been before.

The string band of this place have about all they can attend to. Their music is first class.

HOLLOWAY.

Archie Boyd came back from the east, last Tuesday, where he has been visiting.

The Friends are holding revival meetings at the valley, commencing last Monday, several being held morning and evening throughout the week. They have decided to build a new church on the site of the old one near Raisin Center. About $2200 have already been raised. It will cost between $2500 and $3000.

Thieves entered Wm. Westgate's corn crib last Thursday night and helped themselves to a few bushels of corn.

The bandana social at W. E. Doty's last Friday evening was a decided success. It was held for the benefit of the literary society and cleared them over $20. The society added forty volumes to their library last Saturday, making in all over 100 volumes from the best and most popular authors. The following is the program for the next meeting, Feb. 4.

Recitations by Carrie Satterthwaite and Aggie Thompson.
Declamations by Bret Simonds, Edgar Rogers and Bennie Shay.
Essay—Mary Chatfield.
Select reading—Jennie Boyd.
Chip Basket—G. Conkling.
Impromptu—A. Bichard.
Question—Resolved, That boards of trade are injurious to the country and that gambling in produce should be considered a criminal offense.

Mr. Ed. Baker has been running a feed mill in the old cheese factory at Raisin Center, since Christmas. He grinds every day and seems to be doing quite a large business.

SPRINGVILLE.

The Sons of Temperance gave an entertainment and oyster supper at their hall Tuesday evening to a full house. The affair was one of merit to the society. The Springville Cornet band was in attendance and furnished music for the occasion. After the exercises a fine oyster supper was furnished by the society, from which they netted $16. The following is the program of exercises:

Music by the band.
Opening Address—S. E. Kirkby.
Recitation—Clara Richardson.
Essay—Mary Booher.
Selection—J. H. Clayson.
Selection—Rachel S. Mosher.

Lansing Republican: On Thursday evening, soon after dark, E. C. Riley, foreman of A. Clark & Co's blacksmith shop, and an estimable man, left the Barnes house, where he was boarding, having an errand at a relatives who resides in the wooden block opposite, on the east side of Washington avenue. Being somewhat hurried he passed rapidly around to the alley in the rear, and as he was turning the corner he received a blow in the face from some unseen person which knocked him senseless. His first recollection after receiving the blow came to him in Bertch's meat market, having struggled to his feet, wandered in there in a dazed condition, and inquired the way to the Barnes house. He was not robbed at he had left his watch in his room and only had a few cents in change in his pockets. Mr. Riley's face is not much bruised, but there is a small cut under his chin. It is believed he was struck with a sand club, but as he saw no one, there is no certainty about it.

CIRCUIT COURT.

In the case of Jones vs. The Lake Shore railroad company, the jury rendered a verdict last Friday of $8,500 for the plaintiff.

The appeal case of Lighthall vs. Hatch was tried in the afternoon, which resulted in a verdict of five dollars in favor of the plaintiff. The court then adjourned until Tuesday morning of this week, when the celebrated dam case of Thos. Boyd vs. the town of Tecumseh was taken up. This case is still on trial, and will probably continue during the week.

The New Cover of the Century.

Now that it is evident that The Century has not only not lost but has made a decided gain since the change of name from Scribner's Monthly (an average gain of 13,000 copies,) the publishers have decided to drop the latter name from the outside page and retain it only on the second page, as a sub title, in which form they have a right to use the words till October, 1882. It is especially fitting under these circumstances that the magazine should have a distinctive new cover. In fact, as already announced, it is to have five covers, or, rather, one general design and four variations—one each for the special issues, November, February, May and August. The first one which the public is to see is the February or Midwinter design. The name of the magazine at the top of the page retains the general character of the words it replaces, and is connected by an intertwining of branches with the elaborate design of the lower half of the page, which represents a female figure, "Winter," with an unique lamp, and a background of the Aurora Borealis, the whole framed in by twining bare boughs. In a medallion appear in a combination design the signs of the Zodiac appropriate to the winter months. The new covers are the work of Mr. Elihu Vedder.

GEO. W. BAIN, of Kentucky, the great temperance orator, will lecture at the Opera House next Tuesday evening.

AWAY DOWN SOUTH.

GREENVILLE, TEXAS, Jan. 19, '82.

DEAR EDITOR:

In my last epistle I wrote that the weather was summer like; well, so it was, and so it had been all winter until a few days ago, when it caught a sudden cold. Now the fact is that the weather in Texas is as capricious as a woman and changes as suddenly. We have what are called Northers; they are in style during the winter months; they are an institution peculiar to Texas—and I will say right here, that their peculiarities are a plagued sight too peculiar to suit me.

The Norther comes on us as suddenly and unexpectedly as the James boys prance down on a train. The weather may be as bland and salubrious as a candidate before election, but a Texan, one acquainted with the peculiarities of the climate, will not venture away from home without his overcoat, for he knows not the hour or minute when a Norther may come swooping down on him. Should a blue line be seen across the northern horizon, a somewhat sulphurous smell be detected in the air, the cattle with heads and tails erect be seen making for the timber, then it is time to take in sail by throwing off linen dusters and putting on overcoats, getting into the house, closing doors and making fires, for the Norther is at hand like a tax collector, and it is about as merciless. Should the above precautions be neglected, woe to the luckless wight who is unable or neglects to obey them. All of a sudden he will feel as if a host of icicles were running a race up and down his spinal column; his teeth will chatter like pebbles in a dry gourd; he will feel, as far as ordinary clothing is concerned, as if he was in the undress uniform of a Fejee islander, a paper collar and a pair of spurs; the end of his nose will have a sensation as if Old Boreas was beating a tattoo on it with the north and south poles, and altogether he will feel as if he would like a small installment of the warmth of that place which the translators of the revised edition knocked out of the King James' version of the new testament.

To illustrate how suddenly the weather changes, I will relate a couple of circumstances as told to me; I do not vouch for the truth of them; I only give them as related to me. A gentleman, not feeling well, stepped into a saloon to get something for his stomach's sake; he called for Tom and Jerry, which I am informed, is a hot drink; just as he was raising the mug in which it was contained towards his mouth a Norther swooped down, and before he could get the mug to his mouth and drink the contents they were frozen into a solid lump of ice.

The other one is as follows: During a Norther a pump in a cistern was frozen up; the owner wishing some water stepped out with some boiling water to thaw out the pump and while in the act of so doing a sudden change in the weather from cold to hot came on, and before he could reach the house the sun's rays came down so fiercely that he was prostrated with sunstroke.

In my letter just preceding this I stated that a stranger in a cotton growing section if set down on the sidewalks around the square in this place on one of those moonlit nights would think the streets were covered with snow; but if he were to be set down now in the streets of Greenville he would think he had been deposited in a mass of soft pitch. As to color and tenacity he would perceive very little if any difference. You may ask, why this change! Well, we have had a Norther since I wrote that letter.—Northers are of two kinds—dry and wet, or in other words "straight" and "mixed."

However others like theirs I prefer mine "mixed"—mixed with a large percentage of August weather, and stirred with a section of the equator. But to make matters plain: the last Norther was accompanied with a heavy rain fall and that is why mud, black mud, unadulterated and above suspicion of being mixed with anything else holds high carnival in our streets. If you have never had any acquaintance with black, waxy land you can have but a faint idea as to its adhesiveness when wet. It is a firm adherent; it sticks closer than a brother; a person makes no tracks in it; he carries away the tracks on his feet. If I were to tell you that pigs have such large balls of this black mud adhering to their tails that their hind feet do not touch the ground; or that chickens have such an accumulation of it on their feet that they cannot fly up to roost; or that cattle had such a weight of it clinging to their tails that they are forced back on their buttocks and sit and brush off flies and mosquitoes with their fore feet you would receive the same cum grano salis.

But perhaps I have said enough about black, waxy mud. I am aware that it is a dark subject to write about, but then it is such an easy subject to stick to. But I pause. I cannot do the subject justice.

"EVERY YEAR."

The spring has less of brightness
Every year,
And the snow a ghastlier whiteness,
Every year;
Nor do summer's flowers quicken,
Nor do autumn foliage thicken
As they once did, for we sicken
Every year.

It is growing darker, colder,
Every year,
As the years succeed to glower
Every year;
Years not now for dancing
Or for eyes with passion glancing,
Love's lies and hopes entrancing
Every year.

Of the loves and sorrows blighted
Every year;
Of the hope of friendship slighted
Every year;
Of the ties that still might bind me,
Until Time and Death resigned me,
My infirmities remind me
Every year.

Oh! how sad to look behind me,
Every year
While the clouds grow darker o'er me,
Every year
Where we see the blossoms faded
That to bloom we might have aided,
And immortal garlands braided,
Every year.

To the past go more dead faces
Every year;
Come new ones in their places,
Every year,
Everywhere the sad eyes meet us,
In the evening dusk they greet us,
And to come to them entreat us
Every year.

"You are growing old," they tell us,
"Every year,"
"You are more along," they tell us
"Every year,"
"You can win no new affection,
You have only recollection,
Deeper sorrow and dejection
Every year."

Thank God, no clouds are shifting,
Every year,
O'er the land to which we're drifting,
Every year,
No losses there will grieve us,
Nor loving faces leave us,
Nor death of friends bereave us,
Every year.

THE PUPPET-SHOW.

Many years ago, when a resident in New York, and writing somewhat for the press, I was waited on one evening by a sallow, hollow-cheeked, dark-eyed, dark-haired man, in a thread-bare garment, who glided out of the penumbra of my dim room into the full rays of the candle, like a midnight phantom. The figure bowed, and handed me a card on which was printed, in capital letters, "Zaionczek."

I glanced from the card to my visitor. His deep-set eyes were fixed upon me wistfully.

"Will you take a seat Mr. ——."

"Zaionczek. I have called on you," said the stranger, speaking gramatically, but with a marked Teutonic accent, "because I have found out that you were connected with the press, and I wish to solicit your assistance. I have just completed a work that has occupied my whole life. I am now 60. Will you do me the honor to visit my exhibition-room? Yours will be the first human eyes, besides my own, to enjoy a sight of my wonderful work."

My curiosity was now fairly excited. I threw my cloak around me, donned my cap, and bade the stranger lead on. He glided noiselessly down the stairs, and out before me into the busy street; swiftly and dextrously he threaded the crowd along Chatham street, pausing, at last, before a two-story brick building, which he entered by a narrow passageway. I felt a cold, clammy hand grasp mine, and was led, with many a gentle caution, up a flight of steps, through a doorway, and into a hall of tolerable size, furnished with benches, as I perceived by the dull, red glare of an old cast-iron stove. My guide kindled a match by touching it to the door of the stove, and applied it to the gas-burner. A dazzling jet of flame leaped out, and then I saw before me a sort of proscenium, rudely painted in fresco, framing a small curtain of green baize. Behind this Eleusinian drapery my strange friend, after seeing me seated, disappeared.

After a while the curtain rose, displaying a miniature ring, covered with sawdust, and lighted by half a dozen little lusters. A little tinkling band, all unseen, discoursed a popular overture. Then a small gate was thrown open, and one, two, three, four horses, about six inches high, ridden by ladies and gentlemen of appropriate size, bounded into the ring. They swept round the circle, and then drawing up in a line before me, saluted with their tiny riding-whips. The band struck up a new air, and away dashed the little equestrians. Various evolutions they performed most creditably, and then dashed out swiftly, one after another, vanishing into the stables whence they had appeared. It was truly wonderful. Then came a clown, with a boisterous "ha! ha!" actually uttered by his own little lungs; and a riding master, who ran after the little clown, and cracked his little whip about his legs; and a beautiful little lady, on a little piebald pony, who performed extraordinary feats, indeed. There was a tightrope dancer, and a performance on the slackrope; and then a little pyrotechnist came forward and threw up some little rockets, and then the curtain fell.

Zaionczek appeared at length, and I was lavish of my praises, and told him I thought the exhibition would succeed to a charm. His wan cheek flushed with the rosy hue of pleasure.

"I think I shall succeed," said he "The little folks for whom I have labored cannot fail to to be enchanted; and the great folks must certainly acknowledge my mechanical genius. We shall hit New York; we shall please Boston; we shall charm Philadelphia; we shall electrify the Houses of Congress; we shall fascinate New Orleans. We shall play before Queen Victoria and Louis Philippe, and the Emperor of Russia, and then, my friend—".

"What then?"

"Then, sir, I shall buy some pleasant place; and I shall set down with these little people and enjoy myself."

"Then you have no family?"

"No family! Oh, I understand you, sir. I have no wife—but these are my children. Miss Cœlina, the youngest, is three days old. I finished her last Wednesday—it was only screwing on her legs. The riding master was a little rheumatic to-night—didn't you notice it, sir? I'll oil his joints before I go to bed—but they'll be all right by Monday, when we open.

This singular being had expended nearly all his means in bringing his puppets to perfection, and had little to bestow upon the press. A few of us performed a labor of love in bringing his exhibition before the public, but in such a city as New York, with a thousand strange sights pressing for patronage, it requires capital to obtain audience and command attention.

The puppet-show opened to a poor house. The artist consoled himself with the hope of a better fortune the next night. A few people dropped in. A Wednesday's exhibition attracted some school children, but the figures were so small, they were seen to be little advantage, the lights were so inadequate, that the troupe did not make that impression on the mass they were calculated to produce on an individual. As an exhibition, it was a failure.

I saw the artist daily. Sometimes he spoke cheerfully of his prospects. One night he had taken five dollars; the next six; and he flattered himself his receipts would keep on increasing; but, alas, they dwindled away to nothing. A few of us forced loans of trifling sums upon poor Zaionczek—he never asked assistance; but all hope of the exhibition supporting him was entirely out of the question.

Once I suggested to him the idea of selling his figures to jewelers, to be used as an attraction to show-windows. I shall never forget his indignant and eloquent refusal:

"What!" he exclaimed, "sell them—my children, the creatures of my brain, my fancy and my oil! Sir, they are a part of my life! I love them better than myself. How do you think I could bear to see Miss Cœlina pass into other hands and wear out her beautiful limbs at the bidding of a hard task-master, who would keep her in the saddle till she was utterly exhausted? And the merry little clown! how could I endure to hear his 'ha! ha!' that cost me so much pains to contrive, dwindle down into an inarticulate wheeze? Who would take the pains I do to dust and oil his lungs? And my little horses, too! To have them driven into skeletons! No, sir—I could not endure it!"

One day he called on me with a woe-begone countenance.

"My friend," said he, "you saw my first exhibition—will you come and see my last?"

With a sense of some impending evil pressing on my heart, I accompanied the forlorn showman to his exhibition-room. Everything was in the same condition as when I first introduced it to the reader. The anthracite was burning in the glowing stove; the green curtain was down. The artist disappeared before the curtain went up, and the performance went off to the applause of one spectator. The curtain fell. Some time afterward Zaionczek appeared, gloomy, but resolute, with a large basket on his arm. He then lifted the cover from his stove.

"Here," said he, taking from the mixed contents of the basket a musical box, "is my orchestra. It will never more play the overture to 'Norma.'" He dropped it into the stove.

"Hold madman!" I exclaimed, "what are you about?"

"Cheating the sheriff!" he exclaimed, sternly.

"Good-by, Cœlina!" he added, pressing the little puppet to his lips; "you were the dearest of them all—the prettiest image ever man conceived. Farewell, light of my eyes!" And the little gauze-attired thing fell into the crackling Gehenna. One after another, horses, men, ladies, rope-dancers, disappeared. "And now," cried the wretched man, "I have done for them, and I'll do for myself."

He was a raving maniac. As the last words left his lips he snatched a knife and, in a moment more, would have ended his existence. I caught his arm and a desperate struggle followed; but I overpowered him at last, and he sank on the floor, exhausted. That night he was conveyed to a lunatic asylum.

Some months afterward I was passing up Broadway, when my eyes were arrested by a sign over the door of a small shop. I paused and read the words: "Zaionczek, Watchmaker." I hastened in. There sat my friend with a glass to his eye, busily engaged in dissecting a Lepine. He recognized me at once, and shook my hand across the counter. He was sadly changed, his hair was quite gray, but his manner was quiet and subdued.

"I am very glad to see you," said he. "I have been very unwell; but I was kindly cared for, and have quite recovered. I had such strange dreams of a lifetime spent in making puppets. What an idea—making puppets for a great people, engaged, as they should be, in the useful arts! The useful is the order of the day—by-and-by ornament and art. Perhaps I shall live long enough to witness the new order of things, and then what a puppet show you'll see!"

Poor Zaionczek! He was never wholly rational in the world's opinion; and many of us are in the same category.

Why Gold Changes Color.

It is well known that the human body contains humors and acids, similar in action to, and having a like tendency towards, baser metals, as nitric and sulphuric acids have, namely, to tarnish or dissolve them, varying in quantity to different persons; of this theory we have abundant proof in the effects which the wearing of jewelry produces on different persons. Thousands wear continually, without any ill effect, the cheaper class of jewelry with brass ear wires, while if others wore the same article for a few days they would be troubled with sore ears, or, in other words, the acids contained in the system would so act on the brass as to produce ill results. Instances have occurred in which articles of jewelry of any grade below eighteen carat have been tarnished in a few days, merely from the above named cause. True, these instances are not very frequent; nevertheless it is as well to know them; every case is not the fault of the goods not wearing well—as it is generally called—but the result of the particular constitution by which they are worn.

Those poisoned arrows from South America in the Smithsonian Institute at Washington are dangerous things to fool with. The points are tipped with woorari, a most deadly poison, which seems to never lose its venom. A short time ago some experiments were made on rats, and though the point of the arrow only pricked the hind legs of the rodents, they died within five minutes after the application was made.

Ingenuity of Fraud.

In 1870, a gentleman of eminence in the mercantile world was grieved by the contents of a letter which he received from a correspondent at Hamburg, the post-mark of which it bore. From the statement it contained, it appeared that a person most minutely described had defrauded the writer, under extraordinary circumstances, of £2,000. The letter continued to say information had been obtained that the defrauder—the dress and person of whom it described—was occasionally to be seen on the Dutch walk of the road exchange. The object of the writer was to induce his correspondent to invite the party to dinner, and by any moral force which could be used, compel him to return the money; adding, that if he should be found amenable to reason, and evince any signs of repentance, he might be dismissed with a friendly caution and five hundred pounds, as he was a near relative of the writer. As the gentleman whose name it bore was a profitable correspondent, the London merchant kept a keen watch on the Dutch walk, and was at last successful in meeting and being introduced to the cheat.

The invitation to dine was accepted; and the host, having previously given notice to his family to quit the table soon after dinner, acquainted his visitor with the knowledge of the fraud. Alarm and horror was depicted in the countenance of the young man, who with tone apparently tremulous with emotion, begged that his disgrace might not be made public. To this the merchant consented, provided the £2,000 was returned. The visitor sighed deeply; but said that to return all was impossible, as he had unfortunately spent part of the amount. The remainder, however, he propose to yield instantly, and the notes were handed to the merchant, who, after dilating on the goodness of the man he had robbed, concluded his moral lesson by handing him a check for £500 as a proof of his beneficence. The following morning the gentleman went to the banker to deposit the money he had received, when, to his great surprise, he was told that the notes were counterfeit. His next inquiries were concerning the check, but that had been cashed shortly after the opening of the bank. He immediately sent an express to his Hamburg correspondent, who replied that the letter was a forgery, and that no fraud had been committed upon him. The whole affair had been plotted by a gang, some of whom were on the continent and some in England.

Good Taste.

It is not only politics, says the Bazar, in which it does not seem to answer for woman to be thoroughly informed, according to the burden of evidence, the majority of people holding that the business of a woman is not to improve others, not to instruct society, not to do anything but please, not to be anything to be charming. Of course we are ourselves far from indorsing such an idea: for we believe it is best for a woman to please and be charming, but never at the sacrifice of any other integral right, and that it is her duty to inform and cultivate herself on every subject that comes before her; but the question how far she may parade her knowledge, correcting, interfering, harranguling, is something to be governed only by maxims of taste. As a rule, allowance being made for the noble army of exceptions, a man feels it a part of his office to instruct, perhaps as a duty developing upon him as the superior being; when he is himself instructed he becomes the inferior, and the course is to be chosen between the necessity of instructing his ignorance and the certainty of wounding his self-love. A woman's self-love is flattered, on the other hand, by the condescension and the interest of him who would instruct her. We have seen many a woman, wise in the ways of the world, subtle as a serpent and mild as a dove, suppress her knowledge and the role of the ingenue, that the tender and appealing charm of justifiable ignorance might pour oil where a contrary course would have had unpleasant results, unconsciously imitating the hero of the French idea, whose politeness obliges him to listen with deference to the remarks of a man who knows nothing of the subject, and of which he himself knows everything. And we have seen many a foolish virgin rattling away and exposing the emptiness of the hollow from which came all this sound and fury signifying nothing. That the tongue is an unruly member we know by practice as well as precept; the tongue is a fire, says the apostle; the tongue can no man tame; and so it is well to remember the dangerous character of the thing, and treat it as we would the fire and the untamable element. To think twice before speaking, especially in the rapid run repartee, is very nearly an impossibility; but the tongue which has been well trained scarcely needs conscious effort, as thoroughly schooled, it is seldom guilty of eccentricity.

"Pro Bono Publico."

It is a remarkable fact, that while thousands of people refuse to read paid puffs of worthless nostrums, some skip over Dr. Swayne's little squib about his Ointment for Itching Piles that itch so much at night. The people well know that it is published for their benefit, in other words it is pro bono publico. May its far reaching effects be perpetuated to the end of time.

SWALLOWED UP.—Centuries ago, the Emperor Caligula built the famous tower of Boulogne, which was carefully guarded down to the days of Charlemagne, lest the lightning should strike it. But they never thought to inquire what the great creeping sea that washed against the foundations was doing, or the little springs down deep in the ground that were mining a way to the sea; and one day the fortress, the lighthouse, and even the cliff itself, went down and were swallowed up.

Have You Ever

Known any person to be seriously ill without a weak stomach or inactive liver or kidneys? And when these organs are in good condition do you not find their possessor enjoying good health? Take Care of the Forests.

More enlightened than their Christian successors, the Moors, in their time took special care of the forests. The Arabs were always remarkable for the wise precautions they took for the preservation of water sources and the distribution of this element of life and fertility. The island of Sicily to this day is covered with aqueducts, subterranean and superterranean, which they built to convey the outflowing of the mountain springs to the adjacent districts. If Palermo now has an abundant supply of water, it owing to the Arab waterworks, and not to the Christian dynasties that at various times ruled the fortunes of that insular paradise.

During the Arab domination in Spain, the mountain forests were protected by the most stringent legislation, and care was taken to preserve a proper proportion between woodland and tillable soil. All these wholesome regulations were annulled when the Moors were expelled from Spain. The dry countries of the east, where prolific plains have been converted into deserts, and vast tracts, once dotted over with populous cities, have now no other tenants than a few tribes of nomadic Arabs, were originally thickly wooded. Progressively with the disappearance of the woods, the natural resources declined. Wherever, according to a well informed writer, statistical records have been preserved, it is proved beyond the possibility of a doubt, that the misfortunes of the desolate regions of the east commenced with the disappearance of their arboreal vegitation.

An exceedingly curious illustration of the precision with which the New York post-office is conducted, says the New York Tribune, was had a few days ago in the department in which misdirected letters are deciphered. A letter from Ireland came directed to "My Mother, New York, America." Of course it was a impossibility to tell to whom the letter belonged, and preparations were made to send it to the dead-letter office. The same day, however, a woman called at the general delivery window and asked for a letter from her son. The gentleman who has charge of the deciphering bureau was immediately struck with the coincidence, and sent for the letter alluded to above. He asked the woman where her son lived, and when she gave the name of the town it was found to be the same as the postmark on the letter. Other inquiries justified the official in delivering the letter to the woman, but he insisted that she should open it there, and on examination it was discovered that it was from her son, and that she was the person for whom it was intended. Of course if she had asked for a letter addressed to her name the answer would have been that there was no such letter. Among other curious letters received a few days ago was one addressed to "J. H. Johnson, wagon and plough maker; all kinds of work promptly attended to; America." The writer had evidently been instructed to address in reply according to the printed letter-head on which the communication had been written, and had literally followed instructions except in giving the name of the town and state.

Practical Hint to Shoppers.

One fine morning, when Franklin was busy preparing his newspaper for the press, a lounger stepped into the store, and spent an hour or more looking over the books, and finally taking one in his hand, asked the shop boy the price.

"One dollar," was the answer.

"One dollar," said the lounger, can't you take less than that?"

"No, indeed, one dollar is the price."

Another hour had nearly passed when the lounger said:

"Is Mr. Franklin at home?"

"Yes, he is in the printing office."

The shop boy immediately informed Mr. Franklin that a gentleman was in the store waiting to see him. Franklin was soon behind the counter, when the lounger addressed him thus:

"Mr. Franklin, what is the lowest you can take for that book?"

"One dollar and a quarter," was the ready answer.

"One dollar and a quarter! Why, your young man asked me only a dollar."

"True, said Mr. Franklin, "and I could have better afforded to have taken a dollar then than to have been taken out of the office."

The lounger seemed surprised, and wishing to end the parley of his own making, said:

"Come, Mr. Franklin, tell me what is the lowest you can take for it?"

"A dollar and a half."

"A dollar and a half! Why, you offered it yourself for a dollar and a quarter."

"Yes," said Franklin, "and I had better have taken that price than a dollar and a half now."

Getting Rid of Rats.

A correspondent gives one or two valuable hints for ridding premises of rats. One very good plan, he says, is to nail a red herring on the wall of the warehouse or place infested, about eighteen inches from the floor; on this, a little to one side, beneath the fish, place a brick or piece of wood near the wall. At an equal distance on the other side set an ordinary steel man trap, not baited. The rats, in jumping off from the brick to get the herring, after a few attempts, are sure to fall down in the trap. This is a good permanent plan, as it is somewhat above their comprehension. If rats have undermined the foundation walls, which they do sometimes to such an extent as to endanger the building, it is of no use to try to stop them out by tampering their burrows with broken glass bottles, for they work dilligently to make new ones. A better way is to put a shovelful of dry sand over each hole. The rats soon come up through this, but in doing so let half the sand into the burrow, which, unlike earth, they cannot either force or carry up again, and by repeating this at every fresh opened place their runs become filled up, and they make up your foundations again. By this means I have known a granary that was terribly infested with rats quite cleared of them. All their burrows being at last filled with sand, they were compelled to betake themselves elsewhere.

Unhealthy or inactive kidneys cause gravel, Bright's disease, rheumatism, and a hord of other serious and fatal diseases, which can be prevented with Hop Bitters if taken in time.

THE
TIMES
Nine stands confessedly at the head of Philadelphia journalism in all that makes a thoroughly complete, general and family newspaper. It is more complete in its news, in its special correspondence, in its varied contributions on all subjects of popular interest, and in all the qualities fit a newspaper for the family circle and for the business man than any of its contemporaries, because its resources are equal to every want of a first class national journal.
"THE WEEKLY TIMES" has nearly doubled its former large circulation during the year. Its contributions from week to week are among the foremost men of the nation, and no department of news or literature is slighted in any number on any pretext. It is adapted as well to woman as to men; hence, although its political intelligence is full and accurate and its political editorials fearless, liberal provision is made for literary, dramatic and musical readers, travels and adventure, fiction, poetry, fashions and the chronicle of current social events. In all these departments the pens of the best writers are engaged, while selections from other journals are made with care, taste and fullness that are unsurpassed.
The "ANNALS OF THE WAR" embracing chapters of unwritten history contributed by prominent actors in the war of the rebellion, are a valuable feature of the paper and have become a recognized depository of such matters, whether from Northern or Southern sources. This department, as well as all others, will be kept fully up to the high standard of former years.

OUR CHIP BASKET

Never rejoice but when thou hast done well.

Obstinacy is the heroism of little minds.

None have less praise than those who hunt most after it.

Then shall rest sweetly if thy heart condemns thee not.

That glory is short which is given and received from men.

He will easily be content and at peace whose conscience is pure.

Thou art not the more holy for being praised, nor the more worthless for being depraised.

He enjoyeth great tranquility of heart that careth neither for the praise nor depraise of men.

Every man, coming to an obscure old age, thinks he would have enjoyed wealth and distinction if—

It is sweet to have friends you can trust, and convenient sometimes to have friends who are not afraid to trust you.

He that thinks himself the happiest man is really so; but he who thinks himself the wisest man is the greatest fool.

"True worth like the rose will blush at its own sweetness." Good. Could never understand before why so many faces are so red.

The glory of the good is in their consciences, and not in the tongues of men. The gladness of the just is of God, and in God; and their joy is of the truth.

Remember that every person, however low, has rights and feelings. In all contentions let peace be rather your object than triumph; value triumph only as the means of peace.

One personal struggle and conquest over self will be of more benefit than listening to a hundred sermons or singing a hundred hymns. It is not so much what we learn as what we practice that benefits us.

A leopard and a fox had a contest as to which was the finer of the two. The leopard put forward his numberless spots: but the fox replied "It is better to have a versatile mind than a variegated body."

In the depth of the sea the water is still; the heaviest grief is that borne in silence; the deepest love flows through the eye and touch; the purest joy is unspeakable; the most impressive preacher at a funeral is the silent one whose lips are cold.

Above all other earthly gifts a good mother stands pre-eminent; she is worth her weight in gold—more than an army of acquaintances. Those who have played round the same doorstep, basked in the same mother's smile, in whose veins the same blood flows, are bound by a sacred tie that can never be broken.

A lazy man's soliloquy: "I would be quite willing to sit up at my meals if I could only lie down at my work."

Young man, don't be afrade to blow yure own horn. But don't do it in front of the proceshun. Go behind and do it.

Wives should always sit up for their husbands, instead of getting their servants to do so. It makes two hours difference in their arrival.

Said Douglas Jerrold: "I knew a man who could speak five and twenty languages, and he never said anything worth hearing in any of them."

A friend apologising for another, remarked, "He is very reserved in his manners." "Very," was the reply, "so much so that they are rarely seen."

"No," replied Mrs. Malaprop, slowly, "I can't say that I ever was in Dublin, but my mother has a second cousin called Irish who dealt in Cork; so there!"

A guide professed to exhibit Balaam's sword; upon which a gentleman observed that Balaam had only wished for a sword; to which it was answered, "Precisely so, and this is the sword for which he wished!"

When placed under a microscope the sting of a bee presents a polish of dazzling beauty, but when placed in the end of a man's nose it takes on the semblance of a rat-tail file dipped in vitriol, and brings out words as rough as a grindstone.

A member of a church being particular about the new minister is said to have prayed aloud at the late meeting of the kirk elders, "Send us not an old man in his dotage, nor a young man in his goslinhood, but a man with all the modern improvements."

It is better not to ask too many questions about the future. A curious husband—that is a husband who was too curious—asked his wife, "My dear, what kind of a stone do you think they will give me when I am gone?" She answered, coyly, "Brimstone, John!"

Judge Men by Their Works.

A man is judged in this life by his works, and in this connection it may not be inopportune to add, that Dr. Swayne has accomplished more good through the medium of his Ointment for skin diseases, than has the entire school of physicians combined. "Its an ill wind that blows nobody good." What the physicians have lost Dr. Swayne has gained.

EARLY DENTISTRY.—The practice of dentistry can hardly be included in the modern arts, for as early as 500 B. C. gold was used for filling teeth, and gold wire was used to hold artificial teeth in position, and does not seem, then, to have been a new art. A fragment of the tenth of the Roman tables, 450 B. C., has reference to the burial of any gold with the dead except that bound around the teeth. Herodotus declares that the Egyptians had a knowledge of the diseases of the teeth and their treatment 2,000 B. C. In Martial, Cassidus is mentioned as either filling or extracting teeth; but he specified that he would not polish false teeth with tooth powder. Lucian mentions an old maid that had but four teeth, and they were fastened with gold. These facts cover a period of six hundred years.

How Millionaires Invest their Money.

It is surprising that money-lenders are so indisposed to accept out-of-town securities. Such, however, is the case, and hence, while millions are waiting investment, lenders will not notice applications from the country. One journal advertises nearly $2,000,000, but city security is wanted. Nearly one-half the above sum is offered by one broker, who represents several large estates. Heavy loans on the very best property can be had at 5 per cent., but on second-rate property, such as tenement houses, livery stables, etc., 6 per cent. is demanded. The Astors do not lend on mortgage, but prefer governments. The reason is found in their objection to appearing in public prints as parties to foreclosure suits. Other prominent capitalists, such as James Lenox, Peter Goelet, and Robert L. Stuart, adopt a similar policy. They purchase first-class railway bonds in large sums; also city bonds, the issue of which amounts to $120,000,000. This personal property, is very carefully kept. The Astors have a large safe, which is always guarded. It probably contains $25,000,000 of such securities. The Safe Security company probably has $100,000,000 in its care, and here no robbery or defalcation has ever been known. There is probably $800,000,000 of personal property held in New York city, almost all of which escapes taxation. This estimate does not include merchandise, but simply capital.

Night Workers.

Bats live their active lives in the night; when sunlight comes they fly away to their holes, there to sleep until twilight comes again, when they resumé the occupation of insect killing. The female bat has rather a hard time of it, as she is the nest and the food of her young until they are themselves able to fly. Often have I seen a female bat, with her young clinging to her breast, flying about in search of food, and the little ones were not so small either. How else could they get along? The old ones make no nest; if they wanted to ever so much they could not, and the chances are that, from their wandering habits, they spend the day in one place and the next in another two or three miles distant, just as they happen to be when day overtakes them, and if they left their young behind them, their exact locality might be forgotten. When the young ones are able to shift for themselves the mother's life is easier, and until winter comes to kill their insect food, she lives luxuriously. Then when all nature is prepared to put on the livery of winter, bats, instead of leaving the scenes where they have passed the summer, repair to their haunts in the caves and walls and, hanging by their hind feet, in little groups of five or six together, pass the dreary season in one unbroken sleep.

Researches in Palestine.

An interesting traveler from Palestine was in in Rome recently. Cavalier Dr. Pierrotti, member of various scientific societies, has lived twenty-four years in the Holy Land, and made a large collection of ancient objects, which he desires to sell to the Italian government. With the Bible in his hand he has traveled all ever Palestine and confronted the names of the places and the traditions of the people with the scriptures. He says, "I had no other guides but the Bible, the history of Josephus and the Pilgrimage of St. Jerome." After making the campaign of 1848 and 1849 in Italy, he went to the East and was appointed military instructor of the troops of the Pasha. He thus had unusual facilities for traveling in the deserted parts of Palestine, and also for excavating. The results of the excavations are sarcophagi of verd-antique serpentine porphyry, and other valuable marbles, richly carved capitals, coins of gold, silver and other metals, arms and armor. He found the Cave of Machpelah, the grave of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and descended into it. He excavated beneath the ruins of the Temple of Solomon, and occupied for a time the ancient city of Bashan. He has entire faith in the literal fulfillment of the prophecies of the return of the Jews, and the restoration of Palestine to its ancient fertility.

Signs of a Prosperous Farmer.

When lights are seen burning in his house before the break of day, in winter especially, it shows that the day will never break on the winter of adversity.

When you see him drive his work instead of his work driving him, it shows that he will never be driven from good resolutions, and that he will certainly work his way to prosperity.

When he has a house separate from the main building purposely for ashes, and an iron or tin vessel to transport them, it shows that he never built his dwelling for a funeral pyre for his family, and perhaps himself.

When his hog-pen is boarded outside and in it shows that he is "going the whole hog or none" in keeping plenty inside his house and poverty out.

When his sled is safely housed in summer, and his farming implements covered both winter and summer, it plainly shows that he will have a good house over his head in the summer of early life, and the winter of old age.

When his cattle are properly shielded and fed in winter it evinces that he is acting according to Scripture, which says that "a merciful man is merciful to his beast."

When he is seen subscribing for a newspaper, and paying for it in advance, it shows that he is speaking like a book respecting the latest movements in agriculture, and that he will never get his walking papers to the land of poverty.

Brain and Nerve.

An old judge who was an admirer of the fair sex entered a railway car, and took a seat by a gorgeously beautiful woman. She was as modest looking as beautiful. The judge gave her some nice peaches, and she answered his questions modestly. At last he told her he was certain they had met before, but he couldn't recall the place where he had had that pleasure. She replied, laying aside her blushes, "Old buster, you're right; you sent me up for thirty days last year, and have jugged me thirteen times." The court fled.

A good wife is the greatest of earthly blessings. A wife never makes a greater mistake than when she endeavors to coerce her husband with other weapons than those of love and affection. Those weapons are a sure pull if he has anything human left in him. Forbear mutual upbraidings. It is the mother who moulds the character and destiny of her child as to the exterior, therefore let calmness, peace, affection, and firmness rule her conduct towards her children. Children are great imitators; whether they have scolding or peaceful mothers, they are generally sure to learn from the example set before them, and thus the consequent joy or sorrow is transferred to other families; therefore let mothers take heed to their conduct. It is not possible to exercise too much judgment and prudence before entering on married life. Be sure the affections on both sides are so perfectly blended, that the two form as it were one mind.

Do Not be Deceived.

In these times of quack medicine advertisements everywhere it is truly gratifying to find one remedy that is worthy of praise, and which really does as recommended. Electric bitters we can vouch for as being a true and reliable remedy, and that will do as recommended. They invariably cure stomach and liver complaints, Diseases of the Kidneys and Urinary difficulties. We know whereof we speak, and can readily say, give them a trial. Sold at fifty cents a bottle at

A correspondent advises planting black walnuts, as soon as ripe, a foot apart, in rows four feet apart; let them grow without trimming for three years, giving good culture; then cut down close to the ground, and "the next season a shoot will strike upward' as straight as an arrow, and at least ten feet high." At this age, he tells the boys, "the trees will be worth $10 a hundred, which is better than to eat the nuts."

A German paper charges English manufacturers with being profitably engaged in the fabrication of idols. The artistic designs and excellent workmanship of British made idols make them very popular with the heathen, who are willing to pay liberally for them in preference to their own make.

It is well known that the kidneys are the human sewers, which wash away the impurities and debris. When they become clogged or inactive, Kellogg's Columbian Oil will remove the cause and create a healthy action, and effect a permanent cure.

An Ithica girl has painted fifty black satin buttons, to ornament a dress for herself, with a pretty design, either a bit of wheat, a bee, or a dainty flower, while around the cuffs and down the front of the dress, from throat to hem, run interlaced clusters of lilies of the valley, with here and there a humming bird in color and form as natural as life. A necklace made in the same manner is also to be worn. The painting is all on a ground-work of black satin, and is delicately and deftly done.

"I am Proud."

A lady patient writes from Fishkill Plains, Duchess County, N. Y., to Dr. David Kennedy, of Roundout, N. Y.: "My foot is entirely well, and I never felt better in my life than I do now. I am proud of Favorite Remedy. Shall I continue its use?" "What ailed the foot?" does the reader inquire. It was ulcerated from impure blood. "Favorite Remedy" purified the blood and the ulcer was healed. Lose no precious time dear woman, but get the "Favorite Remedy" of your druggist, or enclose one dollar to the doctor, at the above address.

Two acres of sunflowers will supply a family with fuel through a long winter. The wood of the stalks and the oil of the seed make roaring and cheerful fires.

Kalamazoo, Mich., Feb. 2 1880.

I know Hop Bitters will bear recommendation honestly. All who use them confer upon them the highest encomiums, and give them credit for making cures—all the proprietors claim for them. I have kept them since they were first offered to the public. They took high rank from the first, and maintained it, and are more called for than all others combined. So long as they keep up their high reputation for purity and usefulness, I shall continue to recommend them—something I have never done with any other patent medicine.

J. J. Babcock, M. D.

Of the prince of Wales and Dr. Lyon Playfair, is told that they were once standing near a caldron containing lead which was boiling at white heat. "Has your royal highness any faith in science?" said the doctor. "Certainly," replied the prince. "Will you, then, place your hand in the boiling metal and ladle out a portion of it?" "Do you tell me to do this?" asked the prince. "I do," replied the doctor. The prince then ladled out some of the boiling lead with his hand without sustaining any injury. It is a well-known scientific fact that the human hand may be placed uninjured in lead boiling at white heat, being protected from any harm by the moisture of the skin. Should the lead be at a preceptibly lower temperature, the effect need not be described. After this let no one underrate the courage of the prince of Wales.

ARTHURS'

HOME MAGAZINE.

A NEW YEAR —WITH— New and Increased Attractions!

The Home Magazine occupies and has always occupied a field especially its own. While gathering for its pages from the whole range of general literature, the editor and his efficient co-laborers exercise the most careful discrimination in regard to quality and influence. Nothing is admitted which, in their view, can give false ideas of life or weaken the bonds of virtue. No matter what may be the reputation, nor how brilliant the talents of the writer, if his moral teachings are at all questionable, they can not find a place in our magazine.—And beyond this, its publishers claim that in its peculiar character and varied departments it is more thoroughly identified with the people in their every-day life and home and social interests than any other first-class periodical.

The Home Magazine for 1882 will be the most interesting and attractive that has yet appeared.

WHAT OUR SUBSCRIBERS SAY.

A little more snow, Mr. Vennor, if you have no objection.

Guiteau shot the President for notoriety, and he is likely to have all he wants before he gets through.

The inspiration theory received a black eye in the Guiteau trial. It had better be hauled in now for repairs.

Pat McGinnis drew a fortune of $3000 from a Bridgport bank and spent it all in a week's spree. Patrick made a fool of himself. He should have deposited his money in the Peoples' Bank of Tecumseh.

Guiteau has bandied his last epithet, hurled his last insult, issued his last address, and blowed his last buncombe in the court room. The jury did their duty; it is now left for the hangman to do his.

An Ohio paper says that a Michigan girl tried to commit suicide by swallowing thirty-six shirt buttons.—Well, an Ohio girl tried the same experiment by chewing up a box of matches and swallowing an ink bottle.

If the wives of the ex-presidents are to be voted a pension congress should show no partiality. Five thousand dollars having been voted to Mrs. Lincoln; why should not the same am'nt be given to Mrs Tilden? But—alas, Uncle Sammy is an old bachelor.

The Republicans have not carried New York once during the last five years except by the aid of John Kelly. In the light of this fact unsophisticated western Democrats are disposed to think that the sooner John Kelly is thrown overboard the better.

Three or four Republican papers are quarreling over Garfield's congressional record, and making rather a disgraceful exhibition of themselves. The Democratic newspapers have a good many sins to answer for but they show their good sense in keeping aloof from this business.

An exchange says: "In congress are eight Irishmen, four Scotchmen, five Englishmen and three Germans."—This classification is all right as far as it goes, but most people would prefer to know how many honest, capable, well-equipped legislators there are in Congress. A correct list of them would be mighty small.

The Mormon problem, which has been such a perplexing one, may soon solve itself. A schism has arisen in the Mormon church, the Reform wing endeavoring to organize a new church on the basis of monogamy. If the government were to encourage and strengthen this heterodox movement in the Mormon church, it might be the means of solving the vexed question at an early day.

In the management of graded schools, the tendency is becoming more and more marked to strengthen the primary departments and place the best teachers therein. A report made last July to the Detroit Board of Education stated that on account of the greater impressibility of early childhood, the first years of school life exert a deeper and more lasting influence on the development of character than any subsequent period.—The best teachers therefore should be assigned to the primary grades, and such wages should be paid as will secure the best.

The famous Dalrymple farm of 75,000 acres, in Dakota, is really made up of smaller farms, with separate ownerships; but all is under the management of Oliver Dalrymple, who owns 4,000 acres outright, and is likely to soon become a half owner of the rest. When he assumed charge, the proprietors of the various tracts put in the land at a fair valuation, and money enough to improve it, charging eight per cent. on the whole investment.—The important provision was, that whenever the profits reached over and above the eight per cent. a year, a sum sufficient to repay the entire outlay, half the land should be his.

THE AMERICAN PRIMARY SCHOOL SYSTEM.

The following essay was read Jan. 20, 1882, by F. V. Horton, before the Tecumseh and Clinton Farmers' Club:

Ladies, Gentlemen and Friends:—It is with a sense of utter inability that I undertake to write upon the subject tendered me at our last meeting by the secretary of this association, well-knowing that it is impossible for me to do the subject justice. The American primary school system is the pillar upon which rests the independence of the American people. When we look abroad upon the condition of the people of foreign nations and see the poverty and suffering of the lower classes, ground down as they are under the heel of despots and kept in subjugation by powerful standing armies under the control of Kings and Emperors or their hirelings, and contrast the blessings that we enjoy in the entire independence of the people; we are prone to ask why this difference. It is found in the intelligence of the American people. Our school system is such that it is within the grasp of everyone to obtain an education. And then the American press is disseminating knowledge broadcast throughout the land, almost as one might say, for the asking. Our country primary schools are the first step toward the education of the people, and are the place from which have eminated nearly all of our most successful business men, and most eminent statesmen. Very few of the eminent men either in the business interests of the country, or the different professions, or the halls of legislation, but what first came from the country and received the first rudiments of their education in a country school house. This at first sight may seem a sweeping assertion, but facts and figures will bear me out in it. An eminent clergyman, a short time ago, wrote to a large number of the successful business men of Boston, asking them to give their early history, and where they received their education. The result was that about one hundred replied: Eighty per cent. were born in the country, and received the most of their education in a country school. Take for instance our most eminent statesmen, past and present. Washington was the son of a gentleman planter, but being born in the south, no doubt was educated by a private tutor. John Adams was the son of a country farmer. Benjamin Franklin was also a son of a poor but honest countryman. Andrew Jackson was the son of poor country parents, left an orphan while young, and picked up what education he could in such schools as the country afforded in his time. Lincoln, it is well known was the long, lank, rail splitter of Illinois. Gen. Grant, who is considered by many, as the greatest General of the present century, was born, reared and educated in the country, up to the time that he entered the military academy at West Point. Garfield, it is well known, was reared in the wilds of a new country. His mother even spliting her own rails to fence in their little farm, the son receiving the first rudiments of an education in the schools of a backwoods country and by the light of the midnight lamp, and driving team on a canal while yet a boy to maintain himself and help his mother.

Now the country primary schools being the medium through which the great mass of the people of this nation receive their education, and being the bulwark of freedom; it stands us in hand to maintain them and see that their standard advances in the same ratio that the nation advances in wealth and prosperity. But are our country schools advancing at the present time as they should? I think not; I believe there is a growing disposition among the people generally, to follow after the fashions and styles of our village and city graded schools. And again, as soon as the scholars get a little advanced, they must leave the district school and be sent to the village or city school, because forsooth it is a little more popular, thus sapping the life of the country schools, and there is at the present time a manifest disposition to hire village or city school teachers to the exclusion of country scholars, no matter how well qualified they may be; but in regard to this matter, our present and the past county superintendents and system are in a great measure to blame. The change from township school inspectors or superintendents to one county superintendent proved a perfect failure, and now I apprehend the three will be three times as bad.—I understand about the first question asked is, have you graduated? meaning of course in some union or high school; if not the chances are strong that they receive no certificate. Only a short time ago a well educated and good teacher, I am informed, went before the three autocrats of this county to be inspected; it is said that among the first questions asked was, How many railroads are there in Michigan? The applicant didn't know. The next was, How many miles of railroad are there in the state? Could not answer, so the applicant had to stand aside. Now I venture the assertion that there is not one in a thousand in this county that can answer those two questions correctly, and if they should, of what earthly use would it be. It is something that does not pertain to our common schools. The question is or ought to be: Are the applicants well up in the branches taught in our primary schools; and have they the firmness to govern them as they should? These were the qualifications sought after by the school inspectors thirty or forty years ago, and I think the teachers of those days would more than compare favorably with the teachers of to-day. Where, now, I would ask, will you find such teachers as Geo. W. Ketcham, Thos. Raymond, Rufus Raymond, Amanda Raymond, Andrew J. Horton, Edson Walker, Peter Collar, Mary Horton, Alonzo F. Bixby and a host of others of their times, that not only taught the school but governed them as well. When I look back through the last forty years and see the vast changes that have taken place, it seems as though I can hardly realize that I am living in the same land. The school houses of those times, nearly all of them, were very rude log structures, some of them had pins driven in the logs, and rough boards or slabs nailed onto them for desks, while slabs with pins in each end answered the part of benches or seats. Now the modern school house is quite a splendid structure, and fitted out with splendid patent desks and seats, made especially for the ease and comfort of the scholar, and I rejoice that it is so. What a change from the olden time. And when I think of the changes that have taken place in the old school districts where I received the principal part of my education it is with a feeling of sadness, and I can but say with the poet:

I've wandered through the district, Tom,
I've sat beneath the tree
Upon the school house playing ground
That sheltered you and me;
But none were there to greet me, Tom,
And few care left I know,
Who played with us upon the green
Some forty years ago.

And now dear friends, where are the school associates of our boyhood days, and how many of them are left to associate the present with the past. And of our old teachers, how many of them are yet left in this stage of existence. Geo. W. Ketcham, the best teacher I ever knew, sleeps in the village cemetery. Mary O. Jackson rests in the cemetery in Raisin. Thos. Raymond found his final resting place beneath the soil of Oregon, and only one of the few remaining of those old teachers still adhere to the old vocation. Amanda Raymond yet teaches and at the same time governs some of the unruly boys of Illinois. All of the others have chosen other occupations or gone to their final rest.

Some are in the church yard laid,
Some sleep beneath the sea;
But few are left of our old class
Excepting you and me;
And when our time shall come, dear Tom,
And we are called to go,
I hope they'll lay me where I played
Some forty years ago.

THE REFORM SCHOOL.

Important Action by the Board of Control—Classes that will be Excluded.

At a meeting of the board of control of the Michigan reform school for girls, held January 20th, the following resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, By section 14 of act No. 133, of the session laws of 1879 the board of control of the Michigan reform school for girls are empowered to return any inmate sent to said school who shall be found incorrigible or an improper subject for admission, to the court by whom said girl was committed.

And whereas no provision is made or can be made to care for certain cases.

Resolved, That this board will not receive into the school either of the following classes:

1st—Insane or idiotic.

2d—Those afflicted with incurable diseases.

3d—Girls who are enciente, and that if any of these are admitted before their condition is known, they will be returned whence they came as improper subjects for admission.

That those girls classed as incorrigible in the law should not be sent to the school is apparent from the law itself.

The law gives the board of control power to return all improper subjects for admission, to the court sending them to the school. This power by implication, if not directly, vests the board with power to determine who are improper subjects for admission. The board wish to reject none who can be legally admitted and properly cared for. They intend making this school fill its place among the noble institutions of Michigan. They have faith that it will prove most successful in its work; but it was not meant to be and can not be turned into an asylum for the insane, nor for idiotic and feeble-minded children; nor is it meant to be nor can it be made into a lying-in hospital, or for those incurably diseased. There is no provision for these classes in the school; they can not be taken care of.

This communication is made at the direction of the board of control, so that the people and courts may understand fully the facts and act accordingly.

Free Press: A better argument ag'st the routine circular mill work of our public schools is rarely furnished than by an experiment at Waukesha, Wis., where for two years an ungraded school has been established, to which dull, truant or feeble children unable to go on in the other grades are sent. Special methods are adopted to interest them, and after a few months they are not only able to regain their lost standing, but in some cases, to enter in advance of their classmates. The teacher attributes this result and their greater interest in their studies to their "getting rid of the drudgery common to other departments." In other words, their studies are made interesting to them, and they become interested in them!

Experience the Best Guide.

The reason why women everywhere use Parker's Ginger Tonic is because they have learned by experience—the best guide—that this excellent medicine overcomes despondency, periodical headache, indigestion, pain in the back and kidneys, and other troubles of the sex.—Home Journal.

STATEMENT UNDER OATH.

"I HAVE been afflicted for twenty years with an obstinate skin disease, called by some M. D.'s Psoriasis, and others Leprosy, commencing on my scalp, and in spite of all I could do, with the help of the most skillful doctors, it slowly but surely extended until a year ago this winter it covered my entire person in form of dry scales. For the last three years I have been unable to do any labor and suffering intensly all the time. Every morning there could be nearly a dustpanful of scales taken from the sheet on my bed, some of them half as large as the envelope containing this letter. In the latter part of the winter my skin commenced cracking open. I tried everything, almost, that could be thought of, without any relief. The 12th of June I started West, in hopes I could reach the Hot Springs. I reached Detroit, and was so low I thought I should have to go to the hospital, but finally got as far as Lansing, Mich., where I had a sister living. One Dr.——treated me about two weeks, but did me no good. All thought I had but a short time to live. I earnestly prayed to die. Cracked through the skin all over my back, across my ribs, arms, hands, limbs, feet badly swollen, toe nails came off, finger nails dead and hard as bone, hair dead, dry and lifeless as old straw. Oh, my God! how I did suffer!!

"My sister, Mrs. E. H. Davis, had a small part of a box of Cuticura in the house. She wouldn't give up; said, 'We will try Cuticura.' Some was applied on one hand and arm. Eureka! there was relief; stopped the terrible burning sensation from the word go. They immediately got the Cuticura Resolvent (blood purifier,) Cuticura and Cuticura Soap (the great skin cure.) I commenced by taking one tablespoonful of Resolvent three times a day, after meals; had a bath once a day, water about blood heat; used Cuticura Soap freely; applied Cuticura morning and evening. Result, returned to my home in just six weeks from the time I left, and my skin as smooth as this sheet of paper."

Tecumseh, Jan. 31, 1882.

GEORGE W. BAIN.

Kentucky's famous orator will lecture on temperance at the Opera House next Tuesday evening. From a satchel full of press notices, all favorable, we select a few as specimens:

He has a personal magnetism which is wonderful, a fund of humor inexhaustible, and a perfect ocean of eloquence, with which he sways an audience as can no other man on the subject except John B. Gough.—San Jose Daily Mercury.

He is a brilliant specimen of the Kentucky orator, having all the fire and impetuosity of Southern blood, controlled by a cultured and well-balanced mind. His lectures are unrepentable. We would as soon undertake to map out the course of chain lightning in the midst of a tempest.—He abuses no one, and talks with marvelous rapidity and telling effect.—Cedar Rapids Daily Republican, Iowa.

He leads his hearers through a maze of continual surprises. His logic, anecdote, eloquence and pathos follow each other in such swift succession that you might be excused for imagining that you stand in the presence of a brilliant and dazzling display of mental fireworks. Off the platform he is a modest, unassuming gentleman; on the stage he is a whirlwind of fiery eloquence, tempered with the keenest logic.—Sioux City Daily Journal, Iowa.

He possesses in a marked degree that indescribable magnetism of appearance that characterized Clay and Douglas. By that magnetism and his matchless eloquence he held the swelltering, surging mass of humanity spellbound by appeals clothed with the most beautiful language ever heard in Kansas.—Kansas City Times.

We venture to say Mr. Bain's lecture was the finest ever delivered in this place. Those who failed to attend because of the small admission fee lost ten times the sum, and missed the grandest treat of their lives.—Wayne Independent.

Any attempt to describe this wonderful lecture would be useless. In humor it is better than Mark Twain; in oratory it equals Wendell Phillipps, and in description surpasses anything we ever listened to. The large audience went away sorry for all who did not hear it.—Lincoln Daily Sentinel, Illinois.

A large audience listened to the lecture of Geo. W. Bain, last evening.—Those who failed to attend missed one of the most brilliant and beautiful lectures imagination can conceive.—Mr. Bain is without doubt one of the most fluent and effective speakers we have ever had in this city. In fact we believe he can say more in an hour and say it better than any platform orator we ever heard, not excepting Gough or Beecher.—Jackson (Mich.) Daily Patriot.

Even old Rome is waking up from her lethargy and attiring herself in the robes of modern progress. That city is preparing for a dog and baby show.

Supper will be served at the residence of L. S. Camburn. All are invited to attend. Table committee—Members of the Macon M. E. church. Clerks—H. J. Niblack and I. Hendershot.

AN exchange says an erroneous impression is abroad that one vaccination was sufficient for a life time.—Others held that one every seven years was sufficient. This is simply a superstition. The fact is that whenever the system of a person is in such condition that vaccination will 'take', that person is susceptible to small-pox.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Liverpool Mercury writes that the worst case of small-pox can be cured in three days by cream of tartar dissolved in boiling water and drank when cold at short intervals. It is a prevention as well as a cure. It has not failed in a hundred thousand cases, leaves no mark, causes no blindness and prevents tedious lingering. An ounce of cream of tartar to a pint of water is the proportion.

AT the Universalist church next Sunday evening the subject of discourse will be Ancient Buddhism or the religion of the greatest number of mankind.

REV. E. N. NICHOLS has been in feeble health all winter, and during the past few days his symptoms have become alarming. His friends are fearful that he may not recover.

MR. & MRS. J. H. GASKILL started this morning for their old home in Mt. Morris, N. J. Mr. Gaskill expects to remain there perhaps permanently, and manage a large farm belonging to his father.

THE minstrel entertainment given by the Adrian band last Tuesday evening was a splendid one, and drew a crowded house. Why couldn't the band be procured to repeat the entertainment in Tecumseh?

ST. NICHOLAS for February came up on our table. It opens with a story of the adventures of a Mexican prince illustrated with a beautiful frontispiece. It is well filled with stories, poems, and a department for "Very Little Folks."

THESE are the days when men make themselves glad in doing good, by going around among the neighbors, by looking after poor and ill-clad children, and by keeping a warm and tender heart for each of their fellows who may perchance be in need, sorrow and distress.

THE February Wide Awake opens brilliantly as an after-Christmas number, giving at the outset the "Compliments of the Season" and a sweet little valentine, along with the Third Prize Frontispiece. The whole number is finely illustrated, there being no less than six full page drawings.—Only $2,50 a year. D. Lothrop & Co., Boston, Publishers.

A SURPRISE donation party was given last Thursday evening to Rev. J. Phelps, at the Rectory. The party was very quietly gotten up; in fact, so quietly that some of his friends did not hear of it until after the event had happened. It was a very pleasant affair, however, and the guests departed leaving Mr. Phelps nearly one hundred dollars richer than he was before.

ONE DAY AT ADRIAN.

Our trips to Adrian are generally short and sweet. We go down on one train and return on the next. But last Friday we went down on business and remained there "all day long." We paid the county offices a call, and found them all in a flourishing condition so far as outward appearances would indicate. Judge Geddes was having enough work to do, but he is making an excellent official. The Register and Treasurer are not driven with work at present, but they can be found at their post of duty every day nevertheless. County clerk Hunter was at the court house on Toledo st. A fraction of an hour was spent there to good advantage. And right here it may not be out of place to state that the business of the Lenawee Circuit Court was never more faithfully and prudently managed than at present. Judge Howell is receiving the encomiums of all for the impartial manner in which he has performed his judicial duties thus far, and no judge ever had abler assistants than County Clerk Hunter and Sheriff Bidwell. Business in the circuit is moving off very smoothly and satisfactorily this term. A circuit of the law offices revealed the fact that the legal fraternity are in clover. Merritt & Navin will move this week into their new quarters over Voorhees store, where they will have a fine suit of rooms. Mr. Graves and Ed. Cook report business good. Judge Stacy had his hands full preparing for the Boyd case which is on trial this week. Millard, Weaver & Weaver have now the most extensive suit of offices in Adrian, and their practice is a credit to the firm. A call upon B. S. Barnes found him head over heels in the furniture shop. Burton is building up a large and lucrative trade and his old Tecumseh friends will rejoice in his prosperity. We also dropped in to see John Hollister in his new quarters. He is always happy in the midst of miller's machinery. He is making a fine flour and the firm are now one thousand barrels behind their orders.

THE PEOPLES' BANK FAILURE.

Mr. E. B. Wood, assignee of the bank, on Saturday last, filed his detailed schedule of assets and liabilities in the County Clerk's office. The assignment covers all the property, except such as by law is exempt from execution, belonging to the Peoples' Bank of W. C. Fitzsimmons & Co., W. C. Fitzsimmons and Leon J. Dutton. The assignee gives bonds in the sum of $20,000, with the following sureties:

It is claimed that the item of mining stock put at $5,025.00 is really worth $11,300. Whether it can be turned into cash at this latter figure is very doubtful. The real estate belonging to Col. Fitzsimmons is located in this state, Kansas and Florida. From the estimated available assets must be deducted the expenses of the assignment, collection, &c. Upon the final settlement the depositors will probably realize just about fifty cents on the dollar.

A newspaper by any other name would be just as valuable. You buy it for a few cents; learn all the news of the day while on your way home in street or steam car; can then place it against your chest, under your coat, and thus keep from catching cold between the corner and your residence; can read it again in the evening, and if lacking in bedclothing, can use it as a blanket at night. After that, it is the best think in the world to put under carpets, and when you are tired and sick of it you can trade it off for tinware.

APPLICATIONS for divorce forty in number, were made in the Hillsdale courts last year.

THE ANNUAL MEETING

Of the Agricultural Society of Lenawee County—Election of Officers and Other Business.

The regular annual meeting of this society was held in Adrian last Friday. Considerable important business was transacted, among which was the election of officers, the reception of the secretary's report and the adoption of a resolution to pay up the debts of the old society. This latter decision was a wise one, whatever the present society's legal obligations may be. The failure to pay those old debts looked too much like a man failing in business to get rid of his indebtedness, starting again under a new firm name, and then refusing to pay his old moral obligations when able to do so. The present society seems to be in a flourishing condition. We present below a list of the officers elected and the secretary's report.

Steubenville, O., May 25, 1881.

Please send me at once one gross of your most excellent medicinal tonic, Brown's Iron Bitters. I have used them in my practice for indigestion, dyspepsia, sour stomach, heartburn, nausea, vertigo, etc., and have met with great success in effecting cures. I find they give perfect tone and real strength to every part of the body, and in cases of kidney diseases and consumption they quickly stop all decay.

R. B. Alexander, M.D. and Druggist.

Adrian Press: Friday evening of last week Mr. Willard Wiggins, of Adrian township, with his team came near entering the "sweet bye and bye" by way of the Hook's mill pond. Mr. Wiggins was engaged in gathering ice and had driven his team down upon the pond when the ice gave way letting wagon and horses into the water which was about six feet deep at that point. Mr. Wiggins managed to save himself and devoted his time to the horses, at the same time calling for aid. He succeeded in keeping the animals heads out of water, and help arriving, they were relieved of their harness, and drawn out by hitching chains to their bodies. One of the horses was considerably exhausted by the half hour's bath in ice water, but a vigorous drive home brought the circulation "to time."

DIED.

McNAIR—Died in Tecumseh on Tuesday morning, January 24th, Mrs. Elizabeth McNair, widow of the late Col. Wm. McNair, in the seventy-fourth year of her age.

Thus another leaf of local pioneer history has been turned, Mrs. McNair having removed to this place from Livingston county, N. Y., fifty-two years ago. She was married to her late husband in 1832, and experienced in as large degree as was common to the early settlers, the bitterness as well as the pleasures peculiar to pioneer life. A faithful wife and mother and a conscientious christian.—"She hath done what she could."

Deceased was born Dec. 28, 1860, hence at the time of her death was twenty-one years and twenty-seven days old. When she was but seven and one half years of age death deprived her of her father. After a few years her widowed mother removed with her family from Adrian, the place of her father's death, to Centerville. After a residence there of a few years, she removed to Tecumseh, when Cora was twelve years of age.—This village was her home from that time until Jan. 1st, 1881, when she was married to John A. Flick, of Bedford, Ohio. Two years ago last June she graduated from our High School. She was a member of the Baptist Sunday school, and one year ago last December she made a public profession of a saving faith in Christ. A little daughter, scarcely a week old at the time of her death, survives her. The funeral services were held in the Baptist church in this village last Saturday at 2:30 P. M., her former pastor, Rev. C. E. Conley, preaching from Psa. 90:9, "We spend our years as a tale that is told." The bereaved husband and relatives have the sympathy of the entire community.

Rules for Home Education.

Unite firmness with gentleness. Let your children always understand that you mean what you say.

Never promise them anything unless you are quite sure you can give them what you say.

If you tell a little child to do something, show him how to do it, and see that it is done.

Always punish your children for wilfully disobeying you, but never punish them in anger.

Never let them perceive that they vex you, or make you lose your self-command.

If they give way to petulance or ill-temper, wait till they are calm, and then gently reason with them on the impropriety of their conduct.

Remember that a little present punishment when the occasion arises is much more effectual than the threatening of a greater punishment should the fault be renewed.

Never give your children anything because they cry for it.

On no account allow them to do at one time what you have [illegible] them for doing at another.

Teach them that the only sure and easy way to appear good is to be good.

Never allow of tale-bearing.

Teach them self-denial, not self-indulgence of angry and resentful spirit.

John Guy and Gen. Cass.

Guy kept the National Hotel in Washington, and among his guests was Gen. Cass, then Senator from Michigan. Guy dressed like Cass, and though not as portly, his face, including the wart, was strangely similar. One day a western friend of the house came in after a long ride, dusty and tired, and, walking up to the office, encountered Gen. Cass, who was quietly standing there. Mistaking him for Guy, he slapped him on the shoulder, and exclaimed, "Well, old fellow, here I am! The last time I hung my hat up in your shanty one of your clerks sent me to the fourth story; but now that I have got hold of you, I insist upon a lower room."

The general, a most dignified personage, taken aback by this startling salute, coolly replied: "You have committed a mistake, sir. I am not Mr. Guy; I am Gen. Cass, of Michigan, and" angrily turned away. The western man was shocked at the unconscious outrage he had committed; but before he had recovered from his mortification Gen. Cass, who had passed around the office, confronted him again, when, a second time mistaking him for Guy, he faced him and said: "Here you are at last! I have just made a devil of a mistake; I met old Cass, and took him for you, and I'm afraid the Michigander has gone off mad." What Gen. Cass would have said may well be imagined, if the real Guy had not approached and rescued the innocent offender from the twice assailed and twice angered statesman.

A young physician asked permission of a lass to kiss her; she replied, "No, sir; I never like a doctor's bill stuck in my face."

The grand and awful difference between a tree and a bore is—the tree leaves in the Spring, and the bore—why he never leaves.

One editor advises another to gather his ears in folds on the top of his head with a back comb, whereat the other seems quite caritated.

Charitable lady—"Poor man! If it were possible to procure work, what situation would suit you best?" Tramp—"Lady's companion, mum."

At a temperance celebration, a little lad appeared in the procession bearing a flag, on which was inscribed the following: "All's right when Daddy's sober."

"Dere vas only a leedle difference boween us," said a burly Teuton who had just horsewhipped another: "I vas cowhided, and he vas cowhided—dot's all."

Many persons sigh for death when in the dumps, but the inclination vanishes when the boat upsets, or the locomotive runs off the track or the measles set in.

"Little boy," said a woman to a boy who had been impudent to her, "Have you a mother?" "No, but pap wouldn't marry you if there wasn't a housekeeper in the whole dang land."

"In choosing a wife," says an exchange, "be governed by her chin." The worst of that is, after having chosen a wife one is apt to keep on being governed in the same way.

"Ma," said a little girl, "if you'll let me buy some candy, I'll be good." "My child," solemnly responded the mother, "you should not be good for pay; you should be good for nothing."

"Is the howling of a dog always followed by a death?" asked a little girl of her father. "Not always, my dear; because sometimes the man that shoots misses him," was the reply.

Women are said to have stronger attachments than men. It is not so. A man is often attached to an old hat; but did you ever know of a woman having an attachment for an old bonnet?

A Buffalo bride got married in a pair of stockings valued at $200. One hundred and ninety-nine dollars' worth of bonnet and one dollar's worth of stockings would have made more show to the public.

"What I want to get at is the animus of the transaction," said the judge. "But, your honor," said the complainant, "there wasn't any at all. He came up quiet like, and grabbed the coat, and was off with it before I saw what he was at. No, sir, there wasn't any muss."

An Indian came to an agent in the northern part of Iowa to procure some whisky for a younger brother, who he said had been bitten by a rattlesnake. "Four quarts!" repeated the agent, with surprise; "as much as that?" "Yes," replied the Indian, "four quarts—snake very big."

"I want to find out who is the master of this house," said a man with a book under his arm to the vinegary-looking woman with a pointed nose, and a very small top-knot, who opened the door for him. "Well, stranger," she said, with arms akimbo, "you must walk around into the back yard and ask a spindle-shanked deacon you'll find there fixin' up the grape-arbor, and he'll tell you if I don't boss this ranch he don't know who does. New, what do you want with me?"

Encouragement.

There will always be enough in the events which befall us to relax the spring of our resolutions, and moderate our aims. Why should we enervate one another by silence when we should speak, by disparagement when we should praise, by shaking of the head when we should be patting on the shoulder, by gloomy vaticinations when we should incite to enterprise, by platitudinizing about the vanity of all things human when we should be stimulating generous and noble motives? There is not too great an exuberance of life in any of us; albeit where there is most, it may be ill-regulated or unwisely directed—and the influence which systematically lowers the action of life can only be mischievous. Brightness is health-giving as well as pleasant; and whatever imparts an impulse to the current of hope and gladness in our soul tends to make them more like, or more likely to become, what they should be.

and get a trial bottle free of cost, if you are suffering with consumption, severe coughs, colds, asthma, bronchitis, hay fever, loss of voice, hoarseness, or any affection of the lungs or throat. It will positively cure you.

Care of Sheep.

Sheep need freedom of action and variety of food more than any of our domestic animals. In winter they require shelter only against heavy rains and melting snows, as even a cold storm is better than a heated barn, at least for Cotswolds. A rough shed, facing the south and capable of being closed during the rain and snow storms is quite sufficient. They should then be kept in small flocks, have spacious yards to roam in, and at all times, except during storms, fed in racks out of doors in ordinary weather. Where cold storms are rare, and the ground is free from heavy snow, artificial shelter is hardly necessary, for Cotswol is at any rate.

One Great Deed is Enough.

Watts invented the steam engine; Morse, the electric telegraph; Whitney the cotton gin, and Dr. David Kennedy of Roundout, N. Y., discovered and prepared the "Favorite Remedy," which is worth more than all of them, because it saves lives and cures disease. It purifies the blood, drives bile from your system, cures those delicate diseases peculiar to women, and is in short, a sheet-anchor in every household. Don't spend your money in paying doctors, when for one dollar a bottle you can have the "Favorite Remedy" always on your shelf.

A MAN

WHO IS UNACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THIS COUNTRY, WILL SEE BY EXAMINING THIS MAP, THAT THE

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC RY

Is The Great Connecting Link between the East and the West!

Its main line runs from Chicago to Council Bluffs, passing through Joliet, Ottawa, La Salle, Geneseo, Moline, Rock Island, Davenport, West Liberty, Iowa City, Marengo, Brooklyn, Grinnell, Des Moines (the capital of Iowa), Stuart, Atlantic, and Avoca; with branches from Bureau Junction to Peoria; Wilton Junction to Muscatine, Washington, Fairfield, Eldon, Belknap, Centreville, Princeton, Trenton, Gallatin, Cameron, Leavenworth, Atchison, and Kansas City; Washington to Sigourney, Oskaloosa, and Knoxville; Keokuk to Farrington, Bonaparte, Bentonsport, Independent, Eldon, Ottumwa, Eddyville, Oskaloosa, Pella, Monroe, and Des Moines; Mt. Zion to Keosauqua; Newton to Monroe; Des Moines to Indianola and Winterset; Atlantic to Griswold and Audubon; and Avoca to Harlan and Carson. This is positively the only Railroad, which owns, and operates a through line from Chicago into the State of Kansas.

Through Express Passenger Trains, with Pullman Palace Cars attached, are run each way daily between CHICAGO and PEORIA, KANSAS CITY, COUNCIL BLUFFS, LEAVENWORTH and ATCHISON. Through cars are also run between Milwaukee and Kansas City, via the "Milwaukee and Rock Island Short Line."

What will please you most will be the pleasure of enjoying your meals, while passing over the beautiful prairies of Illinois and Iowa, in one of our magnificent Dining Cars that accompany all Through Express Trains. You get an entire meal, as good as is served in any first-class hotel, for seventy-five cents.

Appreciating the fact that a majority of the people prefer separate apartments for different purposes (and the immense passenger business of this line warranting it), we are pleased to announce that this Company runs Pullman Palace Sleeping Cars for sleeping purposes, and Palace Dining Cars for eating purposes only. Another great feature of our Palace Cars is a SMOKING SALOON where you can enjoy your "Havana" at all hours of the day.

Magnificent Iron Bridges span the Mississippi and Missouri rivers at all points crossed by this line, and transfers are avoided at Council Bluffs, Kansas City, Leavenworth and Atchison, connections being made in Union Depots.

Tropical Plants.

The most interesting plants, orchids, are well known from the ardor with which they are cultivated on account of their beautiful and singular flowers, are preeminently tropical, and are probably more abundant in the mountains of the equatorial zone than any other region. Here they are almost omnipresent in some of their countless forms. They grow on the stems, in the forks, or on the branches of trees; they abound on the fallen trunks; they spread over rocks, or hang down the face of precipices, while some, like our Northern species, grow on the ground among grass and heathers. Some trees whose bark is especially well adapted for their support are crowded with them, and these form natural orchid gardens. Some orchids are particularly fond of the decaying leaf-stalks of palms or tree ferns. Some grow best over water, others must be elevated on lofty trees and well exposed to sun and air. The wonderful variety in form and color and structure of the flowers of orchids is well known; but even our finest collections give an inadequate idea of the number of these plants that exist in the tropics, because a large proportion of them have quite inconspicuous flowers, and are not worthy of cultivation. More than thirty years ago the number of known orchids was estimated by Dr. Lindley at 3,000 species, and it is not improbable that they may now be nearly doubled. But whatever may be the numbers of the collected and described orchids, those that still remain to be discovered must be enormous. Unlike ferns the species have a very limited range, and it would require the systematic work of a good botanical collector during several years to exhaust any productive district—say such an island as Java—of its orchids. It is not, therefore, improbable that this remarkable group may ultimately prove to be the most numerous in species of all the families of flowering plants. The fleshy aerial roots of most species give them a very peculiar aspect, as they often grow to a great length in the open air, spreading over the surface of rocks, or attach themselves loosely to the bark of trees, extracting nourishment from the rain and from the aqueous vapor of the atmosphere. Yet notwithstanding the abundance and variety of orchids in the equatorial forests, they seldom produce much effect by their flowers. This is partly due to the very large proportion of the species having quite inconspicuous flowers; and partly to the fact that the flowering season for each kind lasts but a few weeks, while different species flower every month in the year. It is only at long intervals that the traveler meets with anything that recalls the splendor of our orchid-houses and flower shows.

Heart Disease.

The origin of heart disease is most frequently traceable to hereditary predisposition, and in many cases it is produced by conduct which was avoidable. Cold, dampness, an enfeebled nervous system conduce to heart disease, but in the majority of cases—taking all classes of society—its acute exhibition is due to breathing impure air. Confinement in badly-ventilated houses, cellar-dwellings, schools, workshops, and factories, is the cause of a great portion of the heart affections so prevalent in this country. The impure atmosphere of crowded dwellings seems to have a similar deleterious action on the chief organ of circulation to that which it exerts on the lungs, and thus we find identical conditions favoring the development of both consumption and derangement of the heart. The thorough and effective ventilation of our rooms and houses, our courts and alleys, which proves a preventive in the latter disease, will assurely hinder the prevalence of the formr. In some cases disease of the hear is produced by violent and continud exertion, such as that of lifting heavy weights and violent rowing, but the se of alcoholic stimulants is a far mor frequent producer of cardiac mischie than over-work, and by its indirect effes on the muscular structure of the hea, it predisposes, especially in advaned life, to fatty degeneration of the orga itself and of its great blood-vessels.

Tobacco is another potent cause of heat disease, its effect being to paralyze the nerves which control the cardiac funtion. Medicists have testified to the exitence of an appalling amount of heat disease among young men who use tobco in its different forms.

New Year's Day in Japan.

Brightest among the many bright festivals of Japanese life is that which celebrates the coming of New Year. Every one makes holyday, all labor is suspended, and the object of all—high and low, rich and poor—is to begin with the new year a new life, and to bury in oblivion everything dark, unpleasant and wretched connected with the old. Generally the weather is sharp and crisp, the sky a cloudless blue, and the sun, shining on the great Sacred Mountain—now a pure white cone—and on the snow-laden trees and houseroofs, gives an air of gaiety to everything. Men, women and children, having paid their respects to their neighbors and to each other—a custom most scrupulously adhered to in every little detail of etiquete—and having exchanged good wishes and presents, flock to the temples to pray for a prosperous future, afterward to meet in the streets, which ring with shouting and laughter, and are ablaze with the colors of every one's best clothes. After kites have been flown, tites spun, battledore and shuttlecock payed, sweets and wines consumed durin the short hours of winter sunshine feasting is commenced within doors and carried well on into the second day of the new year. Much of this good old fashioned rejoicing is disappearing, specially in the big towns; but if the visitor can spare time to travel a littleway inland, to keep away from the big roads and from places where foreign influnces obtain, he will be well repaid by observing the thoroughly healthy and joyous spirit which characterizes the celebration of the Japanese New Year.

There is an almanac issued annually, in December, by the Chinese board of astrommy, and bestowed by a special act of imperial grace on the Coreans, Lewchewans, Annamites, and other tributaries. It contains, says Prof. Harrington, a section intended to be a practical guide in the common affairs of life. The poorer classes watch this part of the almanac, and marry, bury, and do other things only when it advises, and the better-educated people, it is thought, do not start on a journey or enter office except on favorable days.

WASHINGTON NOTES.

CABINET MATTERS.

It is probable that the name of William E. Chandler will be sent to the senate within a few days for the position of secretary of the navy. Mr. Chandler left some two weeks ago for a trip through New England, and has not yet returned. For secretary of the interior it is not at all certain that Mr. Sargent will be selected. Secretary Kirkwood will not remain in the cabinet much longer unless a change in the present programme takes place. It is not believed that his successor has yet been determined upon. Secretary Hunt's future is a matter of some doubt. Judge Folger has notified his friends his present position for one year. He expects to remain longer in order that the President may not be embarrassed in case of the death of Gen. Arthur.

POLYGAMY.

After the funding bill is disposed of in the senate, one of the measures that will be most vigorously pressed is that relative to the suppression of polygamy in Utah. There never was a time in the history of congress when such a universal determination existed among members and senators of both parties to push things in this line. The bill prepared by the judiciary committee of the senate and reported last Monday will probably be the measure ultimately adopted by both houses. It is the first really practical plan prepared upon the subject. Rigidly enforced, it will overcome hitherto insurmountable obstacles. The act provides that no polygamist shall sit on juries, and all persons practicing polygamy shall be disfranchised and forbidden to hold office. Proof of marriage will not be required. This has been hitherto one of the great obstacles against securing convictions, as the rite of wedlock in the Mormon church is a secret one. Under the new law, cohabitation and living with more than one woman will be accepted as proof. The section in the bill providing that polygamists shall be disfranchised and debarred from holding office is Gen. Logan's.

Another important section in the bill was contributed by Senator David Davis. This provides that the president shall appoint five commissioners who shall go to Utah and be registers in the elections after this law shall have passed. These men will see that no one mentioned in the act is allowed to vote, and thus at the very outset will prevent any possible fraud or evasion of the law. It is not intended to prosecute or interfere with any Mormon who is a monogamist. The bill is simply directed against polygamy, and in its present shape is a most practical measure. It has the unanimous recommendation of the judiciary committee, and probably will be passed by the senate without scarcely a dissenting vote. The Mormons are here with a powerful lobby. Their money and manipulation have hitherto had no difficulty in defeating hostile legislation. This year they boast of having collected evidence of the immorality of certain members of congress which is held as a sort of menace over those who might wish to vote against them. There is not very much in this talk. Congressmen are a good deal like other people. Among them are a certain class of men who do not lead decent lives, but the majority are respectable men whose habits are such that they can fear no exposure. The class of material the Mormons are supposed to have been gathering can have but little effect. The president is very anxious for the passage of the measure on account of the credit it will give his administration, and, owing to the extraordinary feeling on the subject throughout the country, congress is equally ready.

THE CONVICTED ASSASSIN.

The prisoner is not much broken down, though he rested poorly Wednesday night. He tossed and tumbled in his cot until an early hour, when he fell into a feverish sleep. The jail officials say his appetite has declined, and that of late he has toyed with the food set before him. He endeavors to keep up his spirits but his face has became drawn and haggard since the verdict was rendered. A couple of reporters called upon him at the prison Thursday afternoon. The privilege of a double cell is no longer allowed him. He was found in the first cell of the silent corridor. There was a wild expression in his eyes, which bore out the theory of the officials of want of rest and loss of appetite. He came to the grated door and greeted his visitors with something of his old courtesy. In answer to a question, he said: "I didn't sleep well last night; I had a headache. It was a long session yesterday, and there was great excitement at the close."

Referring to Scoville's attitude since the verdict, he broke out into his snappy remarks: "Ah, he always had a depressed view of my case, but I'll come out all right. I expected Scoville to see me this morning. He will file his motion for a new trial Saturday, and I suppose he is getting ready for that."

A reporter said that John W. Guiteau had given up all hope.

"Oh, pshaw!" said Guiteau. "John's opinions are not worth anything. He isn't authority on anything."

In further conversation Guiteau said he expected to have two or three first-class lawyers; he didn't agree with Scoville's theory; he admitted that Scoville did his best, but he needed experience in this kind of work.

"The verdict was a surprise to me," he said. "I expected a disagreement. I am decidedly of the opinion that I shall finally escape. The American people don't want me hung, and I don't expect to be. I expect Merrick will be consulted in regard to a new trial. I understand he has prepared an elaborate brief on the question of jurisdiction. I am in good health, and my spirits are not depressed."

At this point Guiteau slyly slipped a package of manuscript into the hands of one of the reporters, and, hastily resuming, said: "I am just as sanguine now that the Deity will vindicate me as I ever was. I never had any doubt about that. I think the jurors were not the right kind of men to be on that jury. One of the morning papers says [reading] 'we (the jury) all had a drink with each meal, and a cigar afterward.' Now, that class of men don't represent this great Christian nation, and yet they were the kind of men that brought a verdict of guilty last night. That's all I can say now, gentlemen."

With that the prisoner turned away. The reporter who obtained the manuscript showed it to Gen. Crocker, who said Guiteau had promised not to make any further statements without his sanction.

SCOVILLE'S INDIGNANT PROTEST.

Scoville came in while the warden was listening to the latest production of Guiteau, and protested vigorously against such statements being issued from the jail, saying they prejudiced the case and threw serious obstacles in the way of those striving to save him. "I wanted him to keep still from the beginning, not only in the press but in court, but I could not control him," said Scoville. "If he does not stop now, I will end the case. I would prefer if you would gentlemen, not to get those things from him. The jury have found him sane. That, however, does not alter my opinion, but under the circumstances he should discontinue such practices."

Scoville finally consented to the publication of the address, which is, in brief, that the jury had not intelligence enough to see his inspiration theory, and entirely ignored the political and patriotic necessity for the act, which he says all Christian people see, and for this reason he is entitled to a new trial. His principal point will be to show the non-jurisdiction of this court to try him, because the president died in New Jersey. Some of the best lawyers in America, he says, say the predominance of authorities are against the jurisdiction of this court. He asks the Washington court in banc to give it their most careful attention, to the end that if the Deity intended to protect him from legal liability here, by allowing the president to depart gracefully and peacefully in New Jersey, that he have the benefit of the Deity's intention. He says he considers this especially providential, in his fancy, and asks the court in banc so to consider it.

He then makes a strong appeal for money to the many people in America that believe in God, and in his own inspiration, and that he is a patriot. He says he wanted to employ a couple of first-class lawyers to do his work before the court in banc. He makes a special appeal to the ladies of America, arguing that his deed saved the nation another war, and that God will get even with American people if a hair of his head is harmed. He concludes:

"Many physical death is nothing but a ... anxious to have my character and inspiration vindicated. To that end I need help. My friends need not be ashamed of me. Some people think I am the greatest man of the age and that my name will go into history as a patriot, by the side of Washington and Grant."

Scoville subsequently had a long interview with the prisoner, and took him to task for writing for the newspapers. Guiteau on his high horse, asking his lawyer how he dared to interfere in such matters, and threatening him with immediate expulsion from the case if such meddlesome conduct was continued.

The jail guards say Guiteau slept fairly Friday night and that he was cheerful and hopeful yesterday. No visitors or reporters were allowed to see Guiteau to-day. The prisoner took exercise in the corridor, the only time in the court is taken. Counsel for Guiteau now claim to have discovered new evidence which will insure a re-opening of the case. All rumors that any of the Guiteau jurors were tampered with are emphatically denied by the foreman and marshal.

Messrs. Scoville and Reed appeared in the Criminal court Saturday, and inquired of the court as to the form of the bill of exceptions which would be required. The court instructed them that it had been the practice of the court to require that the exceptions should be made specifically. In the afternoon the prisoner's counsel filed with the clerk of the Supreme court of the District of Columbia the papers upon which the motion for a new trial will be based. There were filed an affidavit by the prisoner; an affidavit by F. H. Snyder, declaring that a newspaper was found in the room occupied by the jury; an affidavit by J. W. Guiteau, declaring that certain names on the margin of the newspaper were in the handwriting of certain of the jurors; and an affidavit of Scoville, swearing to the discovery of new evidence.

In the bundle filed is a motion for a new trial. It alleges that the verdict is uncertain, in that it "finds the prisoner guilty as indicted," failing to specify under which count of the indictment a verdict of guilty was rendered; that the trial was illegally continued through two terms of court; that the court was without jurisdiction, and that the jury misbehaved in reading a newspaper. Other stereotyped reasons are assigned, such as mistakes in charging and in admitting and excluding evidence.

The prisoner's affidavit is simply a formal one, leaving the matter of a new trial to Scoville. The affidavit of F. H. Snyder says that one day he saw the door of the rooms occupied by the jury at the National hotel, standing open. Looking in, he saw a newspaper lying upon one of the tables. Knowing it was forbidden the jury to have newspapers, he slipped in and took the paper which he found was a copy of the Evening Critic, containing an account of the attempt of Jones to shoot Guiteau. On the margin were either the names or initials of five of the jurors. He took the paper to Scoville. Attached to the affidavit is the copy of the Critic.

Four jurymen, whose signatures, it is alleged, appear on the margin of the copy of the extra Critic, appended to the affidavits filed by the defense in the Guiteau case on Saturday, with the motion for a new trial, deny most positively that a copy of that or any other paper was ever in their apartments at the National hotel, and declare they never had a pen in their hands during the whole course of the trial, except to write an autograph for outside parties, and this was always done in the room occupied by the bailiffs, and in the immediate presence of those officers. The general impression with those who have examined the matter is that it is a clear piece of forgery.

The Ohio legislature adopted a joint resolution asking congress to pass a stringent law to abolish polygamy. It is reported from Washington that detectives have for months been gathering information in regard to the peccadilloes of leading legislators, to be used by the Mormons at the proper time.

The house of Charles Himmelright, near New Portage, O., was entered by four masked robbers at supper time on Tuesday. They tied up the young ladies and by threats forced them to open the safe and hand out $22. Mr. Himmelright soon returned, and was silenced and bound. The thieves took supper, stole a team, and escaped. They missed a package of $1,500 secreted in the house.

The collapse of the Chicago, Portage and Superior railroad threw a large number of men out of work and left them almost penniless. In revenge, they set fire to the great bridge near Vizie, Wis., belonging to the Omaha company. A call was made on the governor of Wisconsin for troops, but the rioters were soon pacified.

The Tennessee river, at Johnsonville, has reached the highest point known during the present flood. The town has virtually been destroyed, and the railroad bridges is threatened. East of Knoxville, on Saturday, the tallest peak of the Buffalo mountains, having been undermined by the constant rains, fell from a height of three hundred feet, alarming citizens for a distance of thirty miles.

The bill prepared by the judiciary committee of the senate for the suppression of polygamy, which will be vigorously pushed to vote, provides that no polygamist shall sit on juries, exercise the right of suffrage, or hold office. Cohabitation with more than one woman will be accepted as proof of polygamous marriage. Another section provides for the appointment of five registrars of election by the president.

The commissioners of immigration at New York have already failed in their efforts to enforce the law levying on the steamship companies a tax of one dollar for each person landed. Seven of the lines offer to pay fifty cents head money, and the commissioners will ask the legislature to change the law to suit the demand of the steamships.

Included in the diplomatic correspondence transmitted to congress, by the president, is a letter of instructions from Secretary Blaine to Special Envoy Trescott. The arrest of President Calderon is called an intentional and unwarranted offense. Mr. Trescott is charged not to make to the Chilian government any explanation of the conduct of Minister Hurlbut.

Exchange: During these long evenings no class of persons should feel more happy than the young, who have good comfortable homes. The pleasant firesides, the agreeable company, the means of enjoyment in books, conversation, games, or in other things equally innocent and profitable, should fill them with a sense of contentment that rises into constant gratitude. No evening need be long in such circumstances. No one should be dreary. Discontent, murmuring, repining, fretfulness, are inexcusable in conditions so fortunate, unless there is a spirit that is sadly perverted.

A BRAVE LADY.

(From the Courier.)

Mrs. Schoonmaker, of Creek Locks, Ulster Co., N. Y., had the misfortune to entirely lose the sight of one of her eyes, through an accident, and endured painful inflamatory action therein for two long years; the other eye finally becoming sympathetically affected, her general health seriously suffering; indeed she was a mere wreck a walking skeleton. In this terrible she consulted Dr. David Kennedy, of Roundout, N. Y., who told her at once that the injured eye must be removed. She quietly but firmly said: "All right Doctor, but don't give me chloroform. Let my husband sit by my side during the operation, and I will neither cry out or stir." The work was done, and the poor woman kept her word. Talk of soldierly courage! This showed greater pluck than it takes to face a hundred guns. To restore her general health and give tone and strength to the system, Dr. Kennedy then gave the "Favorite Remedy," which cleansed the blood and imparted new life to the long suffering woman. She rapidly gained health and strength [illegible] the favorite Remedy [illegible] a priceless blessing to women. No family should be without it. Your druggist has it. If not send to Dr. David Kennedy, Roundout, New York.

MORTGAGE SALE.

On the twentieth day of April, 1855, Peter Van Eps, and Nancy Van Eps, his wife, mortgaged to Elihu L. Clark all those tracts or parcels of land situate in the township of Hudson in the county of Lenawee and state of Michigan, bounded and described as follows, to wit: "Being village lot number five (5) on Laird's addition to the village of Hudson, being situated on section nineteen in said township of Hudson. Also one other tract or parcel of land situate in the village of aforesaid, county of Lenawee, and state of Michigan, described as situated on section nineteen in said township, commencing on the north line of said section nineteen and running thence northerly and parallel with the line of fractions till it strikes the southern angle line of land deeded by Harvey Cobb to David Pratt, and running thence westerly on said Pratt's line till it intersects the east line of land now owned by John W. [illegible] thence southerly till it reaches the southeast corner of said Pierce's lot; thence westerly along the south line of said Pierce's lot to a point forty rods west of the line first above described and mentioned as a part of the boundary; thence northerly on a line parallel with the first described line to the north line of Robert Laird's land at a point four rods west of the place of beginning; thence easterly on said Laird's north line to the place of beginning, to secure the payment of one hundred and twenty-two dollars and the interest to accrue thereon. Said mortgage was on the 27th day of April, 1855, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for Lenawee county, in Liber of mortgages on folios 276, 277 and 278. The mortgage was on the 25th day of October, 1856, duly assigned by said Elihu L. Clark to Joel L. Osborn, which assignment was on the 25th day of October, 1867, duly recorded in said Register's office in Liber 50 of mortgages, on pages 768 and 769. Default has been made in the conditions of said mortgage by the non-payment of the money secured thereby by which the power of sale therein contained has become operative. There is now claimed to be due and unpaid on said mortgage the sum of two hundred and fourteen and seventy-five hundredths dollars, and no proceeding has been instituted at law or in equity to recover said sum or any part thereof. Notice is therefore hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage contained, and the statute in such case made and provided, I will sell at public vendue to the highest bidder at the front door of Dean's opera house in the city of Adrian, in said county of Lenawee, that being the place of holding the circuit court in and for said county, on the first day of April, 1882, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, the land described in said mortgage described or so much thereof as may be necessary to satisfy the amount that shall be on said mortgage, the costs of this foreclosure of sale and a reasonable sum of money for attorney fee as provided for in said mortgage in this foreclosure.

BROOKLYN.

Brooklyn has a mania for brick blocks, that is hourly increasing; and unless those owning eligible building lots ask pin-back prices something will surely result to brighten most kinds of business.

The Fair organization is assured, and Agricultural stores and hardware sanctuaries are springing up like mushrooms. Knowing ones approve each others much talked of plans in bland words but perfect their schemes in silence. It seems as if all parties humbug each other as good naturedly as if 'Alls fair in war' was the double rule of three reduced to a peaceful science. Even the cats on the hotel fence wear a look of pert expectation regarding their future landlord, and manifest a disposition to pur for anybody, as if they meant to be on good terms in case they should move next door the first of March.

There has been such a fever to buy or sell the last week that the millpond forgot to freeze solid enough for safety, and four of the skaters fell in, coming near enough to drowning to satisfy their curiosity about the sensation of strangling. The young lady of the party thought she saw the Owl Club frogs rehearsing their farewell chorus. That musical fraternity reflected so much credit on the whole swamp fraternity recently that the latter have made arrangements to continue their vacation until the Spring term.

Mr. Hendershot, who lives on the Wood farm three miles south of Tecumseh, narrowly escaped a serious accident last Thursday. He was drawing a log, about 40-feet long, and as he was crossing the railroad one of the hind wheels of the wagon ran off the bridge into the ditch, the fore wheels being on one side of the track and the hind wheels being on the other side. After trying for some time to get started Mr. Hendershot saw the freight train bearing down upon him. By working rather lively he got the team lose from the wagon as the train struck the log, lifting it over the fence into the wagon road.—The wagon was not so badly broken as might be supposed, while the train appeared to take no notice of the obstruction.

NIGHT AND MORNING.

I stood alone in the porch last night,
And watched the moon rise over the lea,
Till the shadows waxed in the silver light,
And the night-wind sighed to me.

And down in the garden paths I knew
That last year's leaves were lingering yet—
Leaves that had taken the sun and the dew
Of days I would fain forget,

I leaned as I pondered the Autumn night
"Will love," I said, "like the leaves, die low,
And I cannot rest in the tranquil light"
So I wept, and turned to go.

I stood again in the porch at morn,
The boughs shook down their sparkling spray,
And the sun rose over the springing corn
And the fields of scented hay.

A wain went by with its fragrant load;
The wagoner whistled loud and clear,
But I heard a step on the quiet road,
And I knew my love was near.

Blow, morning wind, o'er sunlit slope,
And carry the dead leaves out of sight,
For my heart beats high with its new-found hope
Ah! why did I doubt last night?

THE BIRTHRIGHT.

I think that I met you, sweetheart,
I fancy the "might have been"
Came to me there in a vision
In the midst of that giddy scene;
But I knew we had lost our birthright
As worshippers at Love's shrine,
So I drew you out from the dance, love,
And your hand lay not in mine.

To-day I lie by the waters
That with mystical music tell
With words that no mortal utters
The truth that I know so well.
We have parted, love, with our birthright;
The pottage that Esau bought
Was pure, to the gaudy trappings
That have won our souls to naught.

Upward away through the ether
I look toward heaven above,
Whence God in His infinite goodness
Gave to His children Love—
Gave them as their best birthright
No portion of power or pelf,
But the joy of the souls surrender
That in love [illegible] itself.

We played with the wondrous garland;
We lost the halo of youth;
We smiled with a fickle brightness
That tarnished the glow of youth;
To Fashion we sold our birthright;
She tricked it with hot-house flowers:
It faded amid the gas-light,
And perished in midnight hours.

Kiss and Make Up.

A New England school teacher of no little celebrity, when he caught two of his pupils fighting, used to send them to bed; their food consisted of bread and milk, or porridge, sent to them in a bowl, with two spoons, or of meat and potatoes sent up, with but one plate and a knife and fork for each. On men-of-war it is customary when two "Jack-tars" resort to pugilistics in settlement of personal grievances to iron them breast to breast, so that their hands almost touch. An exchange gives the following amusing account of the way in which a Russian Solomon treated fish-women who came to blows: He knew that preaching would be of no use whatever where the hearers were two women, who were cursing one another at the rate of one hundred and twenty words a minute, and who were only prevented from tearing one another's faces by the strong arm of the police. "You must be locked in one and the same cell until you have kissed each other." This was invariably the sentence of the new magistrate in every case of female broil which was brought before him. He knew that although kissing one another is a habit with male Russians, it is not so with the women of Muscovy, least of all with the fishwives. The women were hurried off; railed for a time louder than ever; protested that they would die sooner than give this humiliating sign of reconciliation; and then, after a few hours' continement, called the jailer and informed him that they had kissed. They were informed that they must repeat the kiss publicly in the open market-place. A small fine was taken from each, and they were compelled, in the midst of their sisters in trade, to kiss each other three times.

Physical Superiority of the Greeks.

The physical superority of the ancient Alexandrian Greeks to the hardiest and most robust nation of modern times is perhaps best illustrated by the military statistics of Xenophon. According to the author of the "Ambasis" the complete accoutrements of a Spartan soldier, in what we would call heavy marching order, weighed seventy-five pounds, exclusive of the camp, mining and bridge-building tools, and the rations issued in weekly installments, which increased the burden of the infantry soldier to ninety, ninety-five, or even one hundred lbs. This load was often carried at the rate of four English miles an hour for twelve hours per diem, day after day; and only in the burning deserts of Southern Syria the commander of the Grecian auxiliaries thought it prudent to shorten the usual length of a day's march by one-fourth. The gymnastic tests applied by the sintauchus, or recruiting officer of a picked corps, would appear even more preposterous to the uninformed exquisites of a modern "crack regiment." Even tall, well-shaped men of the soundest constitution could not pass the preliminary examination unless they were able to jump their own height vertically, and thrice their own length horizontally, and two-thirds of those distances in full armor; pitch a weight equal to one-third of their own to a distance of twenty yards, and throw a javelin with such dexterity that they would not miss a mark of the size of a man's head more than four out of ten times at a distance of fifty yards; besides other tests referring to their experience in the use of the bow and the sword.

Great Wealth an Injury to Boys.

We think that the power of money is on the whole overestimated. The greatest thing which were done for the world have not been accomplished by rich men, or by subscription lists, but greatest thinkers, discoverers, inventors and artists have been men of moderate wealth, many of them little raised above the condition of manual laborers in point of worldly circumstances. And it will always be so. Riches are oftener an impediment than a stimulus of action; and, in many cases they are quite as much a misfortune as a blessing. The youth who inherits wealth is apt to have life made too easy for him, and so grows sated with it because he has nothing left to desire. Having no special object to struggle for, he finds time too heavy on his hands; remains mentally and morally asleep, and his position in society is oftener no higher than that of a polyp on which the tide floats.

Origin of Names.

It is not generally known that the Hudson is called North river in contradistinction to the south river, as the Delaware was formerly styled. Massachusetts was so dubbed because in the aboriginal tongue is meant "about the great hills"—i. e., the blue hills. Boston, named after the English city, was originally St. Bardolph's town, of which Boston is an abbreviate corruption. Albany was so christened in honor of the Duke of York and Albany, (afterward James II.) at the time it came into possession of the English (1664). Catskill is the Dutch for panther or lynx, which once infested those mountains. Cattaraugus was so designated by the Indians because they had, for some mysterious reason, associated it with unpleasant odors. It means ill-smelling shore. This is not so bad as Chicago, an Indian word, signifying a stench, which, judging from the complaints in Chicago papers of the city's fragrance, would seem to have been properly named. Chenango means big horn, from a fossil tusk found in the river. Crown Point is said to have been so called because scalping parties were sent thence by the French and Indians. Erie signifies wild cat (the Erie railway has certainly been a "wild cat" road, as the expression is understood in the west;) and was borne by a fierce tribe of savages exterminated by the Iroquois. Manhattan is eminently fitting for the metropolis, its import being town on the island. Mohawk was applied by the New England tribes to the Iroquois, from their habit of eating live food. Niagara means neck of water; Oneida, people of the beacon stones; Onondaga, place of the hills; Saratoga, place of the miraculous waters in a rock; Ontario, a village on a mountain—the chief seat of Onondagas; Schenectady, river valley beyond the pine trees; Seneca (not classic, as many have supposed) is a corrupt Indian pronunciation of the Dutch word cinnabar—vermillion. Jersey is a corruption of Cesarea, the old Latin name of the largest of the Channel islands, and very unlike our sister State, which got the title perhaps, by contrast Passaic signifies valley.

A Zaandam "Fire-Woman."

A good many of the children in the street were carrying painted iron or stone buckets, with a tea-kettle on the top. After proceeding some distance up the street, Will and Martin saw some of them coming out of a basement doorway, still with the buckets in their hands, but clouds of steam were issuing from the tea-kettle spout.

"What place is that?" asked Will.

"It is the fire-woman's," said Greta.

"And who and what may she be? I have heard of water-women, sometimes called mermaids, but never before did I hear of a fire-woman."

"She don't live in fire," said Greta; "she sells it. What do the poor people in your country do in summer without a fire-woman? Come and look in."

By this time they had reached the place. Over the door was the sign "Water en vuur te koop." It was not necessary for the children to go inside. They could see the whole apartment through the wide-open door-way. An old woman stood by a stove, or great oven, with a pair of tongs, taking up pieces of burning peat and dropping them into the buckets of the children, and then filling their tea-kettles with boiling water from great copper tanks on the stove. For this each child paid her a Dutch cent, which is less than half of one of ours.

"I understand it," said Will, after they had stood at the door some time, amused at the scene. "This saves poor people the expense of a fire in the summer-time. They send here for hot water to make their tea."

"Yes," said Greta, "and for the burning peat, which cooks the potatoes and the sausage for their supper."

"Why don't they use coal?" asked Martin. "It is ever so much better."

"No, the peat answers their purpose much better," said Will. "It burns slowly, and gives out a good deal of heat for a long time."

"And it smells so delicious," added Greta.

It will never do to think too highly of yourself or to imagine that you have some special claim on the respect of men because of your ancestry. The world, which loved your father because it had good reason to, will instinctively, for awhile at least, lift its hat to your father's son, too; but unless you are the worthy son of your father it will soon learn to stand in your presence covered, and even defiant. Therefore do not look down on people as though they were nothing, and with the feeling that you were made from a different kind of clay. For centuries a morceau has been floating on the surface of Hebrew literature to the following effect;—A copper penny and a gold coin were once lying side by side on a shelf in a mint. The gold coin said scornfully, "Little penny, get out of my way. You are intended for poor men, while I am the coin that kings use." The penny moved away to the other end of the shelf, simply murmuring, "You cannot always tell what destiny may have in store." After awhile a stingy miser came, bought the gold coin and buried it in the earth for safe keeping. The penny was given to a poor man whose brother had just been sold as a slave. He went to the Sultan and pleaded with him for his brother's liberty, promising to give his life and all he had if only his brother could be saved. "Your life and all that you have?" said the Sultan. Then the poor man drew the penny, the bright new penny, forth and answered, "This is all I have in the world. I will willingly give you that and my life, and my gratitude beside." The Sultan's heart was touched. He took the little coin and said, "Your brother shall be saved, and I will wear this penny on a golden chain upon my breast in token of the great love which binds a brother to a brother." So the proud gold coin was hidden in the earth and was lost, while the copper penny adorned the breast of a Sultan. It is better not to be overbearing and proud of your birth, for you can never predict the circumstances by which you may be surrounded.

An Aztec Prince's Wedding.

I must pass over a long period in the life of Master M. with the mere remark that he graduated in both his military and religious classes with the highest honors, and acquitted himself to the most perfect satisfaction of both the alfalquis, or priests, and the teachcauhs, which is nearly the same as our word teachers.

Master M. had, for a long time cherished a hope that some day he might press the throne as king of Mexico. So like the Yorkshire lad who begged salt of a stranger eating eggs near him, so as to have the salt ready in case any one should ask him to accept an egg, he prepared himself fully for the possible emergency, and became not only a military general but a leading alfalqui.

And then he married. I have not room to give you a detailed description of the whole ceremony—its crowds, and fuss, and grandeur—but here is a glimpse of the way it was done.

A lady whose position in society required her to negotiate the match, having previously made all the necessary arrangements, one evening hoisted the happy damsel on her back, and accompanied by four young women, each in appropriate costume, bearing a torch, headed the joyous procession and marched to the house of Master M., where she dropped her cargo of precious humanity. Then the alfalqui asked them if they were mutually agreed on matrimony, and, of course, they said "yes," when he proceeded to tie their clothes together. Then two old patriarchs and two good old grandmothers stepped forward in a very solemn manner, and delivered little sermons suited to the occasion. The new couple walked seven times round a blazing fire, partook of a feast with their friends, heard a final sort of a "ninety-ninthly and to conclude" parting word from the four old people, and then, just as all married people do, went to housekeeping, and having their own way as much as possible. One thing they could not do. There was no law of divorce to appeal to then; death was the only judge who could entertain the question of separation.

Master M. will now disappear to reappear as the Emperor. In the year "ten rabbits," or A. D. 1502, the former monarch died, and the electors selected Master M. to supply his place. In the household of each monarch there was an electoral board of four nobles, whose duty it was, on the death of the ruler, to elect his successor from among the sons and nephews of the crown. Having done this and so notified the successor, they selected four nobles to fill their own places, and vacated their electoral chairs. Master M. when waited upon to be notified of his election to fill his uncle's place, was very busy sweeping down the stairs in the great temple dedicated to the god of war!

A Romance Among the Reds.

There passed down on the train the other day, says the Winona (Minn.) Republican, an aged but smart looking lady, between sixty and seventy years of age, having with her a little child about two years old, whose dark complexion unmistakably betokened Indian origin, and naturally excited some curiosity. The lady was communicative, and told a story filled with romance. She was a widow, with an only son living in Connecticut. Her boy grew to be a young man, and, filled with a love of adventure, he forsook the parental roof and came west. His rovings at last led him to Bismarck, Dakota territory, where he became interested with Indian traders and finally married the daughter of a chief, the fruit of the union being one child. At length, in an engagement with hostiles, the young man was killed. The sad news in due time reached his mother. She was almost disconsolate in her grief. With true maternal affection she at once resolved to search for her son's child, and, if possible, find in it an object upon which she might bestow her care and motherly love. Forthwith she journeyed to Minnesota. The difficulties in the way formed no barrier to her New England energy. Her diligent inquiries along the Northern Pacine railroad brought to her acquaintance a man who had known her son. For fifty dollars he offered to find the squaw who had been her son's wife. Without going into details of the search it is sufficient to say that the tribe of Indians was found, and with it the squaw and the child. When the lady first saw her grandchild she thought she could discern in his features a resemblance to her son, but when the little one was in the midst of a number of Indian children, it was hard to discover much difference. Nevertheless, the grandmother of the dusky little half breed was bent on having him brought up under the gentle influence of Connecticut civilization, and she quieted her compunctions of bartering in human flesh by the exigencies of the case and the gift of six sacks of flour to the bereaved Indian widow. The old lady departed with her new-found treasure, as happy as a boy with a new toy. She fondled the little Sioux with indescribable affection, and the little chap responded by making his doting grandma buy him all the peaches and pears that the train boy offered. The picture of youth and old age seldom has more romance done up in a couple than was here presented. It will not be surprising one of these days to hear of that cultivated little savage pulling with the Harvard crew.

BOYS, HEED THIS.—Many people seem to forget that character grows, that it is not something to put on ready-made, with womanhood or manhood; but day by day, here a little, there a little, grows with the growth and strengthens with the strength, until good or bad, it becomes a coat of mail. Look at a man of business, prompt, reliable, conscientious, yet clear headed and energetic. When do you suppose he developed all these qualities? Let us see the way in which a boy of ten years gets up in the mornings, works, plays, studies, and we will tell you just what kind of a man he will make. The boy who is late at meals and late at school stands a poor chance of being a prompt man. The boy who neglects his duties, be they ever so small, and then excuses himself by saying—"I forgot! I didn't think," will never be a reliable man. And the boy who finds pleasure in the suffering of things will never be a noble, generous, kindly mannered gentleman.

Big Guns in Turrets.

Within a few years, says the New York Herald, national preparations for war have become a sort of rivalry as to what country could make the largest cannon or put the heaviest plates on ships. One day it was reported that a certain government had made a gun that could easily send a missile through ten inches of iron, and all the world believed for at least twenty four hours that this cannon had circumvented the pestilent contrivance of armor clad ships. Next day came the report that some government had covered a ship with twelve inch plates. Then came the story of a gun ten tons heavier, that could pierce twelve-inch plates. Then they used fourteen inch plates, and then ten tons more were added to the weight of the gun, and so the government kept on in a rivalry not unprofitable to the iron founders and plate rollers, but tough on the tax payers. It was a matter of rational curiosity for a great while what would be the limit of this sort of seesaw between guns and armor; and the catastrophe on board the Thunderer seems to indicate the direction in which the limit is to be found. The iron founder's art does not keep progress with the need for increased power in cannon, since castings beyond a certain size cannot be certainly made without flaws; and however these great guns are built up, the basis is always a casting. Armor can be put on ships as heavily as it can be floated, and it does not lose in quality by the addition. Guns lose in quality in proportion to the addition of weight. It is easier to increase the resistance to the direct operation of force than to increase the power of an implement in which scarcely calculable forces are to be developed. Since the mania for this sort of artillery seized upon governments these cannon have never been brought into actual use in any war, and when they are they may prove worse for the many in the turrets than for anybody outside.

Cat Messengers.

It seems that the Belgians have formed a society for the mental and moral improvement of cats. The first effort has been to train the cat to do the work of carrier pigeons. The most astute and scientific person would have his ideas of locality totally confused by being tied up in a meal bag and carried twenty miles from home and let out in a strange neighborhood in the middle of the night. This experiment has, however, been repeatedly tried upon cats of only average abilities, and the invariable result has been that the departed animal has reappeared at his native kitchen-door the next morning and calmly ignored the whole affair. This wonderful skill in traveling through unfamiliar regions, without a guide-book or a compass has suggested the possibility of cats being used as special messengers. Recently thirty-seven cats residing in the city of Liege were taken away in bags a long distance into the country. The animals were liberated at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. At 6:48 the same afternoon one of them reached his home. His feline companions, arrived at Liege somewhat later; but it is understood that within twenty-four hours every one had reached his home. It is proposed to establish at an early day, a regular system of cat communication between Liege and the neighboring village.

The Maiden's Leap.

A daughter of the first Earl of Gowrie was courted by a young gentleman much her inferior in rank and fortune. Her family, though they gave no encouragement to the match, permitted him to visit them at their castle of Ruthven in Perthshire, and on such occasions the chamber assigned him was in a tower, near another tower in which the young lady slept. On one of his visits the young lady, before the doors was shut, got into her lover's apartment, but some of the family having discovered it, told her mother, who, cutting off, as she thought all possibility of retreat, hastened to surprise them; the young lady, however, hearing the well-known steps of her mother hobbling up stairs, ran to the leads, and took a desperate leap of nine feet four inches over a chasm of sixty feet from the ground, alighted on the battlements of the other tower, whence descending into her own chamber, she crept into bed. Her mother having in vain sought her in her lover's chamber, came into her room, where, finding her seemingly asleep, she apologized for her unjust suspicion. The young lady eloped the following night, and was married. The chasm between the towers is still shown under the appellation of the "Maiden's Leap."

It is well known that the kidneys are the human sewers, which wash away the impurities and debris. When they become clogged or inactive, Kellogg's Columbian Oil will remove the cause and create a healthy action, and effect a permanent cure.

Permit No Substitution.

Insist upon obtaining Floreston Cologne. It is pre eminently superior in prominence and rich delicacy of fragrance.

TO THE AFFLICTED.

Since the introduction of Kellogg's Columbian Oil it has made more permanent cures and given better satisfaction on Kidney Complaints and Rheumatism than any known remedy. Its continued series of wonderful cures in all climates has made it known as a safe and reliable agent to employ against all aches and pains, which are the forerunners of more serious disorders. It acts speedily and surely, always relieving suffering and often saving life. The protection it affords by its timely use on rheumatism, Kidney affection, and all aches and pains, wounds, cramping pains, cholera morbus, diarrhœa, coughs, colds, catarrh, and disorders among children, makes it an invaluable remedy to be kept always on hand in every home. No person can afford to be without it, and those who have once used it never will. It is absolutely certain in its remedial effects, and will always cure when cures are possible. Call at C. A. Wright & Co.'s and get a memorandum book giving more full details of the curative properties of this wonderful medicine.

A Beautiful Thought.

When the Summer of youth is slowly waning away on the nightfall of age, and the shadow of the path becomes deeper and life wears to its close, it is pleasant to look through the vista of time upon the sorrows and felicities of our early years. If we have had a home to shelter, and hearts to rejoice with us, and friends have gathered round our fireside, the rough places of wayfaring will have been worn and smoothed away in the twilight of life, and many dark spots we have passed through will grow brighter and more beautiful. Happy, indeed, are those whose intercourse with the world hasn't changed the tone of their holier feelings, or broken those musical chords of the heart whose vibrations are so melodious, so tender, and so touching in the evening of their lives.

Kalamazoo, Mich., Feb. 2, 1880.

I know Hop Bitters will bear recommendation honestly. All who use them confer upon them the highest encomiums, and give them credit for making cures—all the proprietors claim for them. I have kept them since they were first offered to the public. They took high rank from the first, and maintained it, and are more called for than all others combined. So long as they keep up their high reputation for purity and usefulness, I shall continue to recommend them—something I have never done with any other patent medicine.

J. J. Babcock, M. D.

'Twas Tuesday night, the moon shone bright, and all was cool and shady when a gay young gent down First street went walking with a lady. They talked of love; he called her dove, and told of his affection; she heaved a sigh and turned her eye in an opposite direction. But why that start that chills the heart as if with ice encrusted? Ah! do not blame sweet Sarah Jane, for in a sudden hustle she broke the string—the treacherous thing—that held her paper bustle.

One Great Deed is Enough.

Watts invented the steam engine; Morse, the electric telegraph; Whitney the cotton gin, and Dr. David Kennedy of Roundout, N. Y., discovered and prepared the "Favorite Remedy," which is worth more than all of them, because it saves lives and cures disease. It purifies the blood, drives bile from your system, cures those delicate diseases peculiar to women, and is in short, a sheet-anchor in every household. Don't spend your money in paying doctors, when for one dollar a bottle you can have the "Favorite Remedy" always on your shelf.

AN UPRIGHT LIFE.—Nothing is more certain than that human conduct produces its effect upon human character and determines its future weal or woe. Virtue and uprightness give the pure heart and clear conscience, whose working is an ample reward for effort and sacrifice. Vice and wrong inevitably leave their marks on the soul and tend to misery. Retribution follows as the night the day upon human action. Goodness hath its reward; sin hath its punishment.

"Pro Bono Publico."

It is a remarkable fact, that while thousands of people refuse to read paid puffs of worthless nostrums, some skip over Dr. Swayne's little squib about his Ointment for Itching Piles that itch so much at night. The people well know that it is published for their benefit, in other words it is pro bono publico. May its far reaching effects be perpetuated to the end of time.

PROVERBS.—Proverbs are short, pointed pithy sayings, condensations of wisdom for practical guidance. Cervantes styled them "short sentences drawn from long experience." Howell says the component parts of a proverb are "sense, shortness and salt." Lord Bacon called them "the genius, wit and spirit of a nation;" and according to Earl Russell, a proverb is "the wisdom of many and the wit of one."

Daniel Boone's Snake.

A writer in a western paper tells how he was blasting with gunpowder some large and tough logs. From one of the logs thus split open crawled an enormous serpent, which was easily killed. The man who tells the story continues from this point as follows: "On stretching it out I found it to be thirty-one feet two inches in length, and the thickest part of its body measured twenty-nine inches in circumference. It was a different species of serpent from any I had ever seen before. Its tail was armed with a sharp pointed and curved horn; its body was variegated with alternate brown and dirty yellow stripes, and on close examination I discovered that it had been totally blind, its eyes seeming to have turned into a reflectionless, hard, bone-like substance. This explained its undecided, hesitating movements when it first came from the log. A strange crease appeared about the neck, just back of the head, which I found to be caused by a stout thong of leather, about which the flesh of the serpent had grown until it had sunk almost out of view. Cutting this thong and removing it I found attached to its under side a copper plate which had heretofore been hidden by the body of the snake, and on one side of it was scratched: "D. Boone, April 15th, 1779." I split the log in two, and near the lower end of the hollow I found where there had once been an opening, but long years ago it had been closed up with a plug made of oak wood, about and over which the maple had grown until it was almost concealed. The dead appearance of the small portion visible of the oak plug was all that called my attention to its existence. My theory of the matter is this: Daniel Boone many years ago, on the date recorded upon this piece of copper, caught the snake, then young and small, fastened the copper plate about his neck, and imprisoned it within the hollow of the tree by means of the oak plug, where his snakeship had remained until the day I delivered him to the free air and sunlight again."

Sabbath Rest.

It is a well established fact that more real work is performed by those who labor only for six days than by those who devote all the seven to unremitting toil. It has been proved in the case of the overwrought statesman and professional man, as well as in that of the 'bus-driver, who works for sixteen hours a day from one week's end to the other. In this occupation few pass the age of fifty years. The celebrated Mr. William Wilberforce, so well acquainted with all the great statesmen at the beginning of this century—Pitt, Fox and other giants of those days—has record that "he could name several of his cotemporaries in the vortex of political cares whose minds have entirely given away under the stress of intellectual labor so as to bringing premature death." Sir David Wilkie's experience was that "artists who wrought on Sunday were soon disqualified from working at all," adding that "he never knew a man to work seven days in the week who did not kill himself or his mind." Lord Chancellor Bacon, Sir Matthew Hale and Sir William Blackstone, amongst our Judges, contribute the same testimony, and give their experience of the moral injury caused by the practice. The latter says "that a corruption of morals usually follow a profanation of the Sabbath."

A Safe Man.

That man who is scrupulously polite and respectful to all women in public, but habitually saves coarse manners and vulgar language for his own wife and daughters, is no gentleman. He is only an imposter. The young man who oils his hair, puts sweet odors upon his pocket handkerchief, and bows with charming elegance to Miss Arabella Spriggins and her lady friends, and goes home to sneer at his mother, disobey her wishes, and treat her with familiar discourtesy, is a pinchback imitation only of a gentleman. Genuine good manners and gentle breeding should begin at home. As a rule the men in a community who are the most trusted are the best men at home. When a man opens his front gate, only to meet his wife's face at the door radiant with pleasure, and hear the shout from the eager children "Papa is coming," it is safe as a rule to lend that man money. He is honest and will repay it if he can.

Casts from Living Forms.

I was taken by a friend, says a Paris correspondent, to see the wonderful plaster casts of living human beings which are among the curiosities of the Russian department. How the thing is done it is impossible to imagine, but there the two statues are, recumbent female figures, undoubtedly taken from living women. One lies slightly turned upon her side, her lips parted in a smile, as though she was trying to suppress a laugh. The other, who was much the finer form of the two, lies face downward, her feet crossed and her head followed on her folded arms, as though she had thrown herself down to sleep. The minutest details of the texture of the skin, nails, etc., are very perfectly reproduced, the "gooseflesh" wherewith the skin is covered being amusingly noticeable, and showing that the preparation used for these casts, the composition whereof is a secret, must be applied cold. Then all the little indentations in the soles of the feet and the palms of the hands, and the curve of the nails and their rimmings of skin and flesh are produced with startling accuracy. The process by which these figures are produced is still a secret, but it is certainly a wonderful and curious discovery.

A German paper charges English manufacturers with being profitably engaged in the fabrication of idols. The artistic designs and excellent workmanship of British made idols make them very popular with the heathen, who are willing to pay liberally for them in preference to their own make.

"I want and will have a wife without a failing," was the remark of a young man who had three seasons' experience of life. His sister, with only a country girl's philosophy, remarked: "Then you'll never marry; because, should you find such a woman, she'll be sure to want a husband of the same character."

"A San Francisco woman, having no faith in banks, carried around $2,400 in her bustle. Thus her income was always in arrears."—Norristown Herald. No, sir; you are very much behind in that joke; it was the woman who put her money all into a solitaire earring, and her property was always in her ears.

Before and After.

"Save me, doctor, and I'll give you a check for a thousand dollars." The doctor gave him a remedy that soon eased him, and he called out: "Keep at it, doctor, and I'll give you a check for five hundred dollars." In an hour more he was able to sit up, and he calmly remarked: "Doctor, I feel like giving you a fifty dollar bill." When the doctor was ready to go, the sick man was up and dressed, and he followed the physician to the door, and said: "Say doctor, send in your bill the first of the month." When six months had been gathered to Time's bosom, the doctor sent in a bill amounting to five dollars. He was pressed to cut it down to three, and after so doing, he sued to get it, got judgment, and the patient put in a stay of execution.

A WAY PASSENGER.—He was a "cullu'd tramp," and approached Captain Jase Phillips as the train hauled up at Pewee. "Is you the capt'in ob de kears?" "Yes," replied Jase. "Don't want fo' to hire any deck hands does ye?" "No! I'm not running a steamboat." "Zac'ly! Mout I ride straddle ob de cow-snatcher to de next landin'—I'se busted an' a long ways from home." "Get on! All aboard!" and the negro straddled the "cow-snatcher." Ed Gilligan pulled out the throttle wide open, and the train had not gone more than half a mile before the engine collided with a cow. Next day, coming down, the negro limped up to Jase at the same depot and said: "Boss, I didn't ride far wid you on that cow-snatcher. Kase de cow wanted to ride dar, too, and dar wan't room fo' hofe of us, so we got off togedder in a co'n field fo' to rest. De next time I rides wid you I'll freeze to de tail ob de wagon—hit's safer."

A German oculist rented a cottage at Cape May, and soon found that he was paying an exorbitant price for it. His landlord was also his milkman. One morning when the milkman came along the oculist looked him in the face and asked: "Vat is the matter with your right eye, my frent?" The milkman said he did not know that anything was the matter with it, but he was frightened. Next morning he asked the oculist to examine the eye. The latter pronounced it very bad, and said that in less than six months that eye would be blind. The oculist treated him and easily cured him, for there was nothing the matter with him. Then it was a race between the rent and the oculist's bill; but the oculist won.

A San Francisco correspondent of the Baltimore Sun writes: "Mules are much used here packing goods over mountains impracticable for wheels. They are driven loose, often twenty in a lot. To prevent straying, a white horse with a bell is put in the lead. The herd accepts his lead; they listen for his bell and never stray. But put a colored horse in his place and he is not noticed. Put any kind of a fellow-mule there and they treat him with contempt. This dogged superstition seems founded on some dogma to which all mules are wedded. If your team passed on a dark night, a white horse at pasture, they are sure to see a ghost, snort, tremble and be off."

Great geniuses appear to cherish the fond delusion that their powers must remain at the meridian, and be susceptible to no decline or decay. Few, indeed, have been those who possessed that self-abnegating wisdom which perceives when the mental powers have attained the exact zenith in the broad concavity of thorough development. Irving was one of these, and his last work was his greatest; but the great majority of the famous, blinded by vanity or thoughtlessness, refuse to relinquish the pen until even the memory of their former greatness can procure from them nothing more than the contemptuous toleration of pity. The most sorrowful of sights is a Titan shorn of his strength, and while hurling pebbles, calling them the tremendous rocks with which he once did battle with the gods.

If there's anything that relieves the monotony of a newspaper man's existence it is to have fellows come in at an interval of an hour or so and say, "I want the name of the man who wrote that item." It is then that the editor, with an agonized expression, runs his hands through his hair, jams his feet into the waste-basket, and wishes he had ne'er been born.

Death to rats, mice, roaches and ants; Parsons Exterminator. Barns, graneries, and households cleared in a single night. No fear of bad smells. Best and cheapest vermin killer in the world. Sold everywhere.

Be Honorable.

Boys and young men sometimes start out in life with the idea that one's success depends on sharpness and chicanery. They imagine if a man is able always to "get the best of a bargain," no matter by what deceit and meanness he carries his point, that his prosperity is assured. That is a great mistake. Enduring prosperity cannot be founded on cunning and dishonesty. The tricky and deceitful man is sure to fall a victim, sooner or later, to the influences which are forever working against him. His house is built upon the sand, and its foundation will be certain to give away. Young people cannot give these truths too much weight. The future of that young man is safe who eschews every shape of double-dealing, and lays the foundation of his career in the enduring principles of everlasting truth.

How Paris Pays Her Bills.

Paris Letter: "The government of the city of Paris is sustained by indirect taxation, there being little or no tax levied on real estate except for paving or repairing and keeping the streets in order. The housekeeper and the tenant pay the taxes, such as they are, but the greater portion of the revenue of the city comes from indirect taxation. Everything that is brought into Paris in the shape of food for for domestic purposes must pay an octroi, or entrance duty, of 11 fr. a meter, at the barrier before it is landed. The receipts from this source this year amount to 220,000,000 francs, or about $50,000,000; market dues, $3,000,000; slaughter-houses, $800,000; rents of stands on the public ways, $100,000; dues on burials, $140,000; sales of lands in cemeteries, $150,000; taxes for paving, lighting, etc., $2,500,000; dog tax, $110,000; sale of night soil, $150,000—total receipts about $47,000,000, without any direct tax on real estate. The city of Paris never has any floating debt to fund, but always has a balance to add to the sinking fund, after expending about $5,000,000 per annum for public improvements, and the ornamentation of the city. It is the best governed city in the world and has no rings or cliques to deplete its treasury.

A Vexed Clergyman.

Even the patience of Job would become exhausted were he a preacher and indeavoring to interest his audience while they were keeping up an incessant coughing, making it impossible for him to be heard. Yet how very easy can all this be avoided by simply using Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds. Trial bottles given away at

C. A. Wright & Co.

The Duke of Wellington.

He understood very little, if anything, of the questions of state policy beyond the immediate field of his own personal responsibilities and duties. Of political economy he was supremely ignorant, yet his strong common sense enabled him at last to recognize some of its fundamental truths. His speeches on economical subjects teem with puerilities and absurdities, without ingenuity in conception or expression. Of the ends and objects of government he had formed no philosophical estimate, nor dreamed that authority had any other duty or function than to cause itself to be respected and obeyed. The people were altogether a cipher in his eyes, except as grouped round the sovereignty. All his sympathies were with rulers, whatever was the character of their rule, and he cared nothing for subjects, whatever might be the nature of the subjection. But when dangers menaced the ruling few "from the action of the serving many," he had the sagacity to discern that those dangers justified and demanded concessions.

Judge Men by Their Works.

A man is judged in this life by his works, and in this connection it may not be inopportune to add, that Dr. Swayne has accomplished more good through the medium of his Ointment for skin diseases, than has the entire school of physicians combined. "Its an ill wind that blows nobody good." What the physicians have lost Dr. Swayne has gained.

BENEFITS OF LAUGHING.—"He who laughs can commit no deadly sin," says the mother of Goethe. "I am persuaded" said Sterne, "that every time a man smiles—but much more so when he laughs—it adds something to his fragment of life." Douglas Jerrold, the prince of modern wits, exclaims: "Let materialists blaspheme as gingerly and acutely as they will, they must find confusion in laughter." And yet laughter is akin to weeping, for true humor is closely allied to pity, paradoxical as it may seem.

A BRAVE LADY.

(From the Courier.)

Mrs. Schoonmaker, of Creek Locks, Ulster Co., N. Y., had the misfortune to entirely lose the sight of one of her eyes, through an accident, and endured painful inflamatory action therein for two long years; the other eye finally becoming sympathetically affected, her general health seriously suffering; indeed she was a mere wreck, a walking skeleton. In this terrible she consulted Dr. David Kennedy, of Roundout, N. Y., who told her at once that the injured eye must be removed. She quietly but firmly said: "All right Doctor, but don't give me chloroform. Let my husband sit by my side during the operation, and I will neither cry out or stir." The work was done, and the poor woman kept her word. Talk of soldierly courage! This showed greater pluck than it takes to face a hundred guns. To restore her general health and give tone and strength to the system, Dr. Kennedy then gave the "Favorite Remedy," which cleansed the blood and imparted new life to the long suffering woman. She rapidly gained health and strength, and now says the Favorite Remedy is a priceless blessing to women. No family should be without it. Your druggist has it. If not send to Dr. David Kennedy, Roundout, New York.

HOME MAGAZINE.

A NEW YEAR —WITH— New and Increased Attractions!

The Home Magazine occupies, and has always occupied a field especially its own. While gathering for its pages from the whole range of general literature, the editor and his efficient co-laborers exercise the most careful discrimination in regard to quality and influence. Nothing is admitted which, in their view, can give false ideas of life, or weaken the bonds of virtue. No matter what may be the reputation, nor how brilliant the talents of the writer, if his moral teachings are at all questionable, they can not find a place in our magazine.—And beyond this we publishers claim that in its peculiar character and varied departments it is more thoroughly identified with the people in their every-day life and home and social interests than any other first-class periodical.

The Home Magazine for 1882 will be the most interesting and attractive that has yet appeared.

WHAT OUR SUBSCRIBERS SAY

"The day on which the Home Magazine comes is hailed every month with joy, not only by myself, but the whole family. It is like the face of an old friend."

FARMERS IN COUNCIL.

MAGON INSTITUTE HELD AT GRANGE HALL LAST THURSDAY AND FRIDAY.

A Splendid Program of Exercises. A Large Attendance and a Very Successful Meeting.

The three previous institutes which was appointed at Macon Grange Hall for the 20 and 21 inst. was held last week, and every feature of the program was successfully carried out.—The weather seemed to have been prepared especially for the occasion, and it was welcome that the committee in charge had a special understanding with Mr. Webster on that point. Soon after noon on Thursday people began to assemble and before two o'clock the hall was filled with an appreciative audience.

The company was called to order by Thos. F. Moore, President of the Institute and the afternoon program was then presented as follows, viz:

Music by the choir.

Prayer by Rev. Jesse Kilpatrick.

Music by the choir.

Address of welcome by Mr. Moore.

Mr. Moore delivered his address and presented in the usually vigorous style. He welcomed the farmers to the institute, and the representatives of the agricultural college to the county. He paid a tribute to the usefulness of the college and hoped that it might will strengthen and, stronger as the years passed on.

Miss A. M. Collins, Macon, responded in behalf of the Macon Grange and the town.

Miss Collins formally extended a welcome to all those present from outside towns and townships and gave a brief outline of township history. Macon was named from the stream running through the town which derived its name from an Indian war who owned a wigwam where the Macon empties into the River Raisin. The town was settled in 1830 and the pioneers of 50 years ago only two remain, John Shaw and Joseph Howell. The population is 1200. There are six churches of worship within her borders and all school children growing present money. We have to change and we are happy to say the outlook is very bright. We and our system of [illegible] and good roads shall have much improvement. Macon will take our position among the foremost agricultural towns of the county.

No one will deny that most men and women now engaged on agriculture are of sound mind and good judgment. In the homes of every day life they form their opinion as correctly and act as intelligently as other classes of people. The domain of the western farmer, stretching from the Great Lakes to the Gulf, is a boundless one, the wealth stored therein is boundless, and yet the farming interests are not properly represented in the halls of legislation. What is lacking? Simply literary culture and discipline and being more thinking men. The great practical question for us to solve is how can we best advance the interests of agriculture, to which we all are devoted? Our interests are not represented in legislative halls in proportion to their importance. The educated and cultivated professional and business men monopolize the making of the laws for their own benefit. Can we, so long unacquainted to literary effort, attain task culture and discipline? We can to a certain extent. Where shall we find the teacher to guide us? At the university? I think not. At the agricultural college? This query I hope to see answered to-day. Many perplexing questions which naturally thrust themselves to an enquiring mind will be discussed during these sessions. After years of careful study of the mental capacities of men and women, I am yet to be convinced that there are any civil or political rights given to men, that may not with equal safety be shared by women. If the girl possesses the same quantity of mind as the boy, and the same opinion to apply them, why should not doors of the agricultural college be closed against her admission? Admit both brother and sister. While Agriculture and horticulture and Mechanics are rapidly taking their place by the side of the other sciences. They who are engaged in these occupations are seen to stand by those in divinity, medicine and law. Agriculture is rapidly rising to the pedestal of the other professions. Now, if we are to have a school in agriculture at all, why not educate the girl in horticulture and agriculture as well as the boy in letters the girl, such a school should fit the young men and women for the duties that are crowding upon them. The day closed, with a fervent appeal to sustain the agricultural college and that its doors should be opened to our girls.

This paper was discussed in a few pertinent remarks by Mr. Moore, followed by I. E. Phelps, Prof. Baird and Carpenter, G. P. Waring, C. E. Mickley, R. R. Hall and others. The discussion took the line of admission of ladies to the Agricultural college, and was quite animated and interesting.

Music by the choir.

Paper by Prof. C. Carpenter of the Agricultural College followed with a paper on "The Farmer and the Railroad."

Gen. Shaw's paper gave throughout the whole subject and his name will be cherished in the memories of the people as long as railroads last. The introduction of the locomotive took the world by surprise and the rough, ready and unreasonable attachments. The idea that fourth could run twenty miles an hour was scoffed at. The growth of the railroad in this country has been unprecedented.

1. How roads are built. Two processes are involved in the construction of roads: the raising of funds and the mechanical operation of roads and. The former is usually the more difficult of the two. The President here gave a detailed account of the operations in which the money is raised to construct railroads so to continue discussions placing the bonds etc. [illegible] of more roads a few [illegible] or [illegible] double the actual cost of the roads. The Commissioners then [illegible] the benefits of passenger traffic and showed that in this direction the rights of the public had been very generally respected. There has been little cause of complaint. In the branch of freight traffic however, the case has been different. The transportation of produce by rail lies at the foundation of nearly all kinds of business and frequently the very existence of an enterprise depends upon the rates charged by the railroads upon the transportation of the products. In this direction great and just causes of complaint have arisen. The rates discriminate against local traffic and sometimes towns are compelled, for their own protection, to aid in the construction of competing lines of road. The result is that shippers are taxed unreasonably on two-competing points in order that freight at non-competing points may be taken below cost. Then favored towns are built up at the expense of other towns, and in this freight war, Michigan suffers greatly by the discrimination against her. The President gave extracts from the report of the R. R. commissioner and a large amount of other details showing to show that the Michigan farmer is frequently taxed five to ten cents more per bushel than the farmer west of Chicago. This part of the address produced much farm and discussed.

After the parade etiquette themselves in a freight war a person of considerable fortune, and it seems this combination enterprises always suffer. The great practical question is to find remedies for these evils. This paper was one of the best presented at the Institute, and we regret it cannot be in its entire form.

Music by the Glee Club followed.

Mrs. F. C. Beaver then read an essay entitled "Rural Life."

In the beginning God placed man and woman in a garden. He showed that rural life was ordained for one of happiness. Where do we find man and woman so nearly on an equality as in rural life? There their interests are one. The intelligent farmer's wife is a companion. She herself helps to support the family. The farmer's wife, with her dairy and poultry, keeps the book of sales and expenses with as much pride as ever husband. Encourage your children to keep an account of their expenses. It will encourage them to remain contented at home, and teach them lessons of economy. Rural life to-day is something very different from what it was fifty years ago. Our door work was all done by hand and on foot then, now it is accomplished by labor saving machinery. In doing the sewing machine and other household conveniences take the place of the spinning wheel and the loom. Behold the progress that has been made in farm labor the past fifty years. Most country homes are now handsomely furnished and the tables sparkling with silver and glass. Does this speak of ease and idleness? No. It speaks of industry, thrift, economy, contentment and happiness. Our country homes, as they now exist, offer many advantages for intellectual and moral culture. They are free from the temptations of the city. Our country schools are second to none, and free to all. Our Agricultural College stands with open doors, and the printing press supplies all the members of the family, as soon as they can read, with plenty of reading matter. There is a friendly, hospitable feeling existing among rural neighbors that is not found elsewhere. I am glad this Institute was first in a rural town as its success here will show that the farmers are alive to their interests. Farmers have historic been slow to organize for their own benefit, but they are now in the right track.

Instrumental music.

The afternoon session was then dismissed for supper, and did full justice to the substantial bill of fare which the Macon ladies had provided for the occasion.

Evening Session.

Called to order at seven o'clock and the exercises were opened with music by the Glee Club.

Prayer by Rev. H. Sherpard, of Tecumseh.

Music by the Glee Club.

The lecture of Prof. Hutrewer which was assigned on the program was deferred till Friday, and in its place Prof. B. G. Baird gave an extempore address on the Department of Agriculture.

He claimed that in view of the large proportion of the people, and the wealth of the country, employed in agriculture, and its relation to the other industries of the country, the wonder was not that the government had done so much, but so little for its advancement, as compared with commerce and manufactures, and stranger still that the farmers should have been so slow to press their claims for more favorable recognition.

The department of agriculture is a growth from very small beginnings, promoted from time to time by legislation. A good deal has been done however, outside of any direct legislation that seemed to be demanded by the necessities of the country. From the first [illegible] the national government had been for agriculture in conjunction with the patent office. The first money appropriated by congress in 1839 was in 1839 when $1000 was appropriated from the patent office fund for the collection and distribution of seeds, propagating agricultural statistics and prosecuting agricultural investigations. From that time the appropriations, though very small, were slowly increased, until in 1854 $25,000 was appropriated and a good deal of new work was about that time undertaken. A chemist was employed and original investigations undertaken in that line. The services of a Horticulturalist were also secured, the grounds of the department enlarged and experiments undertaken with seeds and other plants. An Entomologist was engaged to investigate and experiment with reference to the destruction of insect pests that were working great damage to some crops, particularly the cotton plant. Thus far all this agricultural work was done through the [illegible] of the patent office. In 1862 a law was passed organizing the department of agriculture and it that same year President Lincoln appointed Hon. Isaac Newton, of Penn., the first commissioner. In becoming a distinct department there were no radical changes made in the method of prosecuting the work. The scope of the work however was enlarged; the long and increasingly felt necessity for statistical information regarding the growing crops was met by the monthly reports of the department. The lecturer then took up separately the several divisions of the department, gave a brief account of their nature and extent of their work. He defended the increased appropriations asked by Commissioner Loring for the purpose of statistics on the ground that it was only a matter of justice that the producer and seller should have more information regarding the condition and prospects and extent of the growing crops as the buyer. It is proposed to put these [illegible] statistical reports into the hands of the farmers, that they may be as well informed regarding the facts that influence the price of farm products as the buyers of trade.

He claimed that there was a growing necessity for an additional building, as the present one was now much too crowded. He thought the cost of the extention room compared with the library of the naval department would have greatly exceeded the cost of the whole building at present devoted to the uses of the department of agriculture. Mr. Baird closed his address, which was listened to with a great deal of interest, by a brief allusion to the agricultural convention recently held at Washington which he attended as a delegate from this state, and then by special request gave a brief statement of the work done by our state agricultural college.

Music by the Glee Club.

Chas. E. Mickley then delivered an address upon "Success in Agriculture."

In considering this subject we should first take our latitude and longitude to learn the relation which agriculture sustains to the other industries. The farmer feeds them all. Mr. Mickley described the country in 1835, when he came to Michigan. Who, said he, changed this wilderness to a paradise of plenty? The farmer. It has been brought about by our industry. The farmers of this state cast a majority of the ballots, but they have little control of legislation. Organization is the beginning of all reforms. Success in farming lies in raising good men and women as well as good crops. And these, by organization, can accomplish wonders. Patronize home industry, co-operation and concert of action. The address was delivered in Mr. Mickley's easy style and portions of it brought forth hearty applause.

Music by the Glee Club followed and the Institute was then adjourned till Friday afternoon at one o'clock.

Friday Afternoon.

Meeting was called to order at one o'clock by the President.

Prayer by Rev. J. A. De Spelder.

Instrumental Music.

Then followed a paper on "Co-operation" by G. P. Waring.

In this age when so many things are claiming our attention, there are no requisites more indispensable to success than concentration and co-operation. Concentration of aim is first considered because there can be no successful co-operation without it.—New York, with one seaport, leads the nation in commerce. This illustration might be multiplied indefinitely. John C. Calhoun, when in college, was ridiculed by his fellow students for his intense application to study. "Why, boys," said he, "I am forced to make the most of my time that I may acquit myself with credit when I go to Congress," and his ambition was realized. How true it is that many a man of great brilliancy shining fade by having his attention and work divided among many things. The world is full of people who pretend to do many things but who can do not one thing well. The highest ability accomplishes but little if misdirected, while a man with only one small talent, may, if he uses that talent aright, achieve wonders. Thus the farmer who tries to drive half a dozen other kinds of business in connection with his farm generally fails in all of them. When a man has once selected his vocation he should have grit enough to stick to it. And the importance of concentration when applied to the individual is equally true when applied to classes, and then it becomes co-operation. It is needless for me to mention the necessity of co-operation among farmers. Every occupation or profession is co-

A Wrong Idea.

Many persons having gotten the wrong idea that hops are strengthening, having taken to drinking beer and ale very freely. The consequence is they feel better for a short time, but when the reaction comes they are much weaker than before. Reader, if you value life, lay aside all malt and alcoholic beverages and put your trust in that temperance preparation of herb and vegetable juices called Dr. Kilmer's Swamp Root. It gives real strength and strength to every part of the body, refreshes the mind and regulates the vegetable system to its proper standard. Over 1,000,000 bottles have been sold this year.

County Convention.

Pursuant to appointment, a county convention of all the stockholders of the Michigan State Temperance Alliance residing in Lenawee Co., is hereby called on the 14th day of Feb., in the city of Adrian, and will be held in the Workingmen's hall in Lathrop block, and called to order promptly at 10 o'clock a. m. Every member is entitled to a vote in that convention, and every member is earnestly requested to be present, as business of great importance is to be considered. Lest, however, some Branch may not be represented, if the matter be left entirely to individual action, it is urged upon each township Branch to see that delegates be present.

STATEMENT UNDER OATH.

I have been troubled the twenty years with an obstinate skin disease, called by some M. Itch, Psoriasis, and others Leprosy, manifesting on my scalp, and in spite of all I could do, with the help of the most skilled doctors, it slowly but surely extended until a few years ago this winter it covered my entire person in form of dry scales. For the last three years I have been unable to do any power and suffering intensely all the time. Every morning there would be nearly a dishpanful of scales taken from the sheet on my bed, some of them half an inch in the envelope containing this affidavit. In the latter part of the winter my skin commenced cracking open. I tried everything, almost, that could be thought of without any relief. The 12th of June I started West to begin I could reach the Hot Springs. I reached Detroit, and was so low I thought I should have to go to the hospital, but finally got as far as Lansing, Mich., where I had a sister living. One Dr. ——— treated me about two weeks, but did me no good. All thought I had but a short time to live. I commenced praying to die. Crawled through the skin all over my back, across my chest, arms, hands, limbs, feet fairly swollen, the whole cuticle of fingers came off and hand as bone, hair dead, dry and lifeless as old straw. Oh, my God! how I did suffer!

"My sister, Mrs. E. H. Davis, had a small part of a box of Cuticura in the house. She wouldn't give up, said, 'We will try Cuticura.' Some was applied to my hand and arm. Eureka! there was relief. Stopped the terrible burning sensation from the start go. They immediately got the Cuticura Resolvent (blood purifier), Cuticura and Cuticura Soap. The great skin cures. I commenced by taking one teaspoonful of Resolvent three times a day, after meals; had a bath once a day, water almost blood heat; used Cuticura Soap freely; applied Cuticura morning and evening. Result, returned to my home in just six weeks from the time I left, and my skin as smooth as this sheet of paper."

JAMES STEVENSON, of Shakerville, Penn., an uncle of David Stevenson, has been visiting friends in this vicinity for a few days past.

UNCLE JOSEPH SLATER, one of the pioneers of Franklin, departed this life on Monday last, at an advanced age. He had lived an industrious life, had accumulated a large property and was highly respected by all who knew him.

S. W. TEMPLE is going to build a large addition to his planing mill. It will extend on the entire north side of the present mill and be 80 feet by 30 feet in size. Mr. Temple's business is increasing to such an extent that he finds the old quarters too small.

THE following pupils in the 4th grade have not been absent or tardy during the past month: Carrie Cannon, Richard Cupples, Robby Hosmer, Marvin Hayden, Harvey Welling, Frank McNeil, Johnny Nyland, Floyd Brown, Lulu Brown, Mary Pilbeam, Bertie Severance, Robby McClure, Blanche Gough, Wallie House, Andrew Brown, Henry Burger, Alvin Kemp.

WHEN C. W. Culbertson called to pay for his HERALD the other day, we learned that he had been a continuous subscriber from the first number of the paper, issued May 25, 1850, until now. Our talk with him suggested a new idea, that we make up a list of all such subscribers. All of our present subscribers who have taken the paper from the first number until this date are requested to send in their names. We have a special object in view for procuring a list of this kind.

Auction Sale.

The administrator of the estate of A. J. Burtless, deceased, will sell at auction on the premises 1¼ miles north and 1 mile west of Franklin Center, on Tuesday, Feb. 14, 1882, at 12 o'clock, M., the following property: 3 horses, 3 milch cows, 60 sheep, 7 shoats, lumber wagon, 2-seated buggy, bob-sleighs, cutter, sulky rake, fanning mill, corn sheller, 2-wheel cultivator, 40 tooth drag, plow, double harness, quantity of timothy and clover hay, corn stalks, 300 bush. corn, &c.—Usual terms of sale. Ben. Reynolds, auctioneer.

A FIRE.

Last Friday morning shortly before day-break the night watch, John B. Haines, discovered a fire in D. W. Clark's grocery store. The fire alarm was sounded at once, the team was out in less than a minute, and the engine ready for action. In the mean time the store was broken into and the fire extinguished. The chimney in the east wall had been burning out for a day or two and the accumulation of soot in the bottom had smouldered until it heated the bricks to such an extent as to set fire to the floor. In ten minutes more the fire would have been beyond control, at least in Mr. Clark's store, and it is more than likely that the stores in that block would have burned also.—The loss will not exceed two or three hundred dollars on building and stock which was covered by insurance. In this connection we would emphasize the suggestion of the night watch, that one front curtain be left raised in each store over night. An incipient fire would be discovered almost as soon as it started if the merchants would take this precaution.

THE TECUMSEH HERALD.

TECUMSEH, MICH FEB. 9, 1882.

JOHN R. CLARK will deliver his lecture "To and Fro in London," at the Opera House, Feb. 21, 1882. This is to be a benefit lecture. Let the friends of John remember this and give him a full house.

THE ladies of St. Peter's church will give their last social of the season, in the form of a neck-tie party, at the residence of Mrs. S. W. Temple on Thursday eve., Feb. 16, 1882. A cordial invitation is extended to all.

Adrian Press: If Tecumseh does not average an Uncle Tom's Cabin show, at least once a month, there is a great uneasiness among the people. Uncle Tom's cabin is to Tecumseh people what wheelbarrows are to a Hudsonite.

TECUMSEH was literally overflowing last Saturday. People were here from Dundee on the east, to Cambridge on the west, from Manchester on the north to Adrian on the south. Trade was unusually brisk and everybody was happy.

MRS. MATTIE A. BRIDGE will deliver two lectures under the auspices of the Odd Fellows Lodge of Adrian, Feb. 14th and 15th. The subject of the first lecture will be "Human Freedom"; of the second, "The Mission of Odd Fellowship."

REV. R. S. PARDINGTON will be absent from home, till after next Sabbath. He has gone to deliver an address at the dedication of a church at Denton, also to meet in Detroit next Monday the executive committee of the Michigan State S. School Association of which he is chairman.

ED SNEDICOR, who for so many years has been employed in the Tecumseh paper mill, took his departure last Monday for Ypsilanti having received a better position in the Ypsilanti mill. Ed. is a first-class workman and we are sorry to have him leave Tecumseh.

DAVID VANTINE was the first person who ever skated on the Brownville pond, in the year 1830. Last week he searched the garret, found the old skates, strapped them on, went down to the pond and had a good skate. He could not cut quite as many flourishes as he used to do in 1830 but he went through the motions very creditably and enjoyed the sport as well as any of the boys.

A NEW firm has been lately organized here composed of I. C. Wolcott, J. S. Temple and Samuel McClure, under the firm name of Wolcott, Temple & Co. It is really a consolidation of the two separate establishments heretofore run by the two firms. They will deal in lumber, shingles, sash, doors, blinds, mouldings and all kinds of building materials. The new firm will make a very strong team.

THE other evening Hugh Hendershot was crossing the railroad track, a few miles south of town, having on his wagon a huge 40 foot log.—The forward wheels dropped into the ditch and resisted all efforts to pull them out. Meanwhile the five o'clock freight, taking pity on him, hove in sight, and succeeded in helping him out. Luckily nothing but a broken wagon remains to remind him of it.

WILL you be my valentine?

THE Boyd dam case still holds the boards in the circuit court.

MISS EGABROAD of Dundee, was in town last week, the guest of Chas. Kilburn.

THE show windows of the book stores indicate that Valentine's day is near at hand.

S. H. MERRITT is spending a few days with his family at home. He will return to Cadillac the last of the week.

AT the Universalist church next Sunday evening, subject of lecture:—"Confucius, the land of the Flowery Kingdom of the Chinese."

WM. COOK, formerly, of Newburg, has been making his old neighbors a visit this week. He now lives at Michigan Center, Jackson co.

THE HERALD boys are under obligations to Mrs. Jas. Clarkson for a nice cake, which was found among the seven baskets full left over after the farmers' institute.

THERE was altogether too much of a high old time in the village, last Saturday evening. A repetition of such occurences will soon destroy the reputation of Tecumseh as a law abiding community.

H. J. STODDART has gone to Reading, Hillsdale co., where he intends to open a merchant tailor shop. Mr. Stoddart is a first class workman and he will be a valuable acquisition to the business circles of Reading. We wish him success in his new location.

Lady Beautifiers.—Ladies you cannot make fair skin, rosy cheeks and sparkling eyes with all the cosmetics of France, or beautifiers in the world, while in poor health, and nothing will give you such rich blood, good health, strength and beauty as Hop Bitters. A trial is certain proof.

Evening News: A few days ago the News noted the fact that a young woman in Lansing was in search of a long-lost father named Andrew Bouk. Mrs. F. J. Hough, of Adrian, writes to say that a man answering to the name and description is now living at Franklin Center, Lenawee county—Tipton postoffice.

PRETTY much the whole of the Lenawee Circuit Court was in town last Saturday. The jury on duty in the Boyd case drove over to view the dam which has occasioned all the litigation, and the lawyers interested came along with them. The jury will thus be enabled to get at the exact location of the dam and ponds and their relation to the highway. It was a good idea.

A GRAND phantom and dress party will be given by Mrs. Goadby and her class at the Opera House on Thursday evening, Feb. 16th. Music by Williams' quadrille band. Committees—Willis Merritt, Walt. Gardner, Dwight Whitney, of Adrian; Geo. E. Freese, of Clinton; Chas. Robinson, of Manchester; C. A. Wright and A. J. Sherrard, of Tecumseh. Bill for dance $1. Supper at Sink's Hotel at $1,00 per couple. Gallery seats for sale at Adamson's.

THE Jackson Patriot of Feb. 7th has this item: "Gen. Withington is in receipt of a letter from Col. W. C. Fitzsimmons of the first regiment, relative to his absence from the state, which is likely to be still further prolonged. The letter is dated Guatamala, Central America, Dec. 29, and in it he says: 'The mail service is so very slow and so very uncertain here that one is almost out of the world. I have had no word from home since November 7.'"

NOTWITHSTANDING the rain, Geo. W. Bain was greeted with a full house last Tuesday evening. He has not been over-rated at all. The sec; ter is certainly passing from John B. Gough as a temperance lecturer. Mr. Gough excels Bain in telling a story or in working up an oratorical climax. But in presenting a solid, logical, finished lecture in which witticism and pathos are suitably intermingled, Bain is the better man of the two to-day.—A finer lecture has never been delivered within the walls of our Opera House.

A Literary Event.

"An important unpublished work by Thomas Carlyle has been discovered lately. It is entitled 'A Tour in Ireland in 1849,' and comprises notes on the moral and political condition of that country of the most stringent character and greatest interest. This manuscript was unknown to Mr. Froude, and it was submitted to his examination. He was so delighted with it that he volunteered to write an introduction when it is published in book form. Meanwhile, it has been secured by Edmund Gosse for The Century Magazine, where it will shortly begin to appear as a serial, simultaneously in London and New York.

OBSERVATIONS ON MEN AND THINGS.

EDITOR HERALD:

People openly upon our streets express themselves in favor of the speedy execution of the imbecile Guiteau. Ministers of the gospel, whose duty it is to teach mercy and charity instead of the barbarous idea of an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth, have been heard to express this same desire. It seems to prevail among all classes. You, ministers, lawyers even in your hardness of heart, doctors, even with your tendency to desecrate the dead, everybody stop and think. Suppose that you were in the place of the officer who was to perform this execution. Would you be willing to do it? Would you feel justified in so doing? I say not. Notwithstanding the verdict of those twelve men, or that he has taken human blood; notwithstanding the prostrate chieftain lying there silent in death, you would not feel justified. There would always be that down deep within each of you that would whisper in your ear, murder. It would follow you through life, and in the darkness of night when all nature is at rest, when the whole earth is hushed in stillness, your mind would turn back the pages of memory to a horrible picture. An execution upon the gallows. A dark figure standing there with a plank between him and death. That plank suspended in its place with but a cord, and your hand raised to sever that cord. Close the book. This may be just, but I thank God I live in a country where capital punishment has been abolished.

What has possessed the young men lately? We dont hear of any parties, sleigh-rides, pic-nics, boating excursions, etc. There used to be a time when the young men of Tecumseh were lavish in expenditures of dollars, but it is not so now. No sooner do the shades of night fall around our beautiful and once lively village than the young men take up their line of march one at a time, in single file for home. There he remains until bed time, retires, sleeps a niggardly and miserly sleep, awakens in time for family prayers in the morning, and away to business, except Sundays, which are spent in church going, scripture reading, etc. The good old times have gone by when young men were young men; when youthful spirits carried a high hand and the boys ran the town. Something must be done to check this depressing influence. A little wickedness must be thrown in their way and introduced in our midst to clear away this obstacle to healthy, honest and intelligent young men.

Yours Respectfully,
SAMUEL SLY.

A CORRECTION.

EDITOR HERALD:

I notice the following fling at the county examiners in an essay read by F. V. Horton before the Tecumseh and Clinton Farmers' Club, and published in your issue of the 2d, inst. "I understand about the first question asked is: Have you graduated? meaning of course in some union or high school; if not, the chances are strong that they receive no certificate. Only a short time ago a well educated and good teacher, I am informed, went before the three autocrats of this county to be inspected. It is said that among the first questions asked was: How many railroads are there in Michigan? The applicant didn't know. The next was: How many miles of railroad are there in the state? Could not answer, so the applicant had to stand aside. Now I venture the assertion that there is not one in a thousand in this county that can answer those two questions correctly, and if they should, of what earthly use would it be? It is something that does not pertain to our common schools. The question is, or ought to be: 'Are the applicants well up in the branches taught in our primary schools, and have they the firmness to govern them as they should?'"

Our critic would have saved himself the trouble of this effusion had he but taken the pains to ascertain the truth of his statements. It is needless to add that the statements made in this extract are each and all untrue in every particular. He has unwittingly allowed some disappointed candidate or his friend to impose upon his credulity.

The next public examination of teachers for this county will be held at Tecumseh, March 11th, and the board would cordially invite all who are interested in the workings of the new system to be present. Very Truly,

CHAS. D. WEST,
Sec'y Co. Board of Examiners.

JOHN R. CLARK will favor his friends at home with a lecture on Sunday the 19th, and on Tuesday evening, the 21st, he will give his lecture "To and Fro" at the Opera House.—Chalk this date down in your memorandum book and make your arrangements to be there.

Idle Experiments.

When a man is well and sound he can afford to be indifferent to the character of all the medicine in the world. But when disease is fairly eating him up he must do something at once and do it intelligently. Therefore do not dose yourself with a hundred things in the hope some of them may hit the mark, but try Dr. David Kennedy's "Favorate Remedy" which hits it every time. For Kidney and Liver troubles, Piles and Constipation, it is just what you want. Druggists have it, or mail one dollar to the Doctor, at Roundout, N. Y.

Boys and Girls,

If you want the best and cheapest young folks' paper in the United States, subscribe for "The Young Folks Circle," an eight-page illustrated paper published at Cleveland, O.; only 35 cts. a year, and you get a present of two pictures, one of which is worth more than the price of the paper for a year. The paper is published by an old reliable Cleveland firm and you are sure to be fairly dealt with. If you send them the names and addresses of 10 children under 14 years of age they will send you a fine picture of President Garfield and family, the house where he was born and home at Mentor. Sample copy free. Address The Young Folks Circle, Cleveland, O.

The name Jenner means a drawn lancet, putting to flight a loathsome disease, and the name Harvey signifies the circulation of the blood. And the time is coming when the name of Dr. David Kennedy will be indissolubly connected in the public mind with the purification of the blood, a deed only less important than the discovery of its motion through the human body. This Dr. Kennedy accomplishes by means of his new medicine, called "Favorite Remedy."

A dry goods clerk who was staying after ordering his dinner at a Washington street restaurant the other day, was requested by the waiter to take charge for a minute while he stepped around the corner. Before the waiter returned a big, hungry-looking customer entered, intrenched himself behind the first table, glared at the bill of fare held upside down, and savagely demanded what there was to eat.

The clerk saw that this was an emergency that must be met, and after pinning on a napkin he approached and spoke over the back of the chair, as the waiter had done, in the manner:

"I shall be pleased, he said, "to show you a very stylish line. We have a neat article in tomato soup—we can put you up a superior quality of veal, or lamb with mint sauce—and here, Oh here is a lemon pie that is all the rage, and——"

"All the——" put in the customer, catching his breath, "see here, young man, I hail from Norwich, and I can't stand so much gilt-edge. You needn't put up any veal or open any pie around me. If you have anything fit for a square meal, trot it out, and if you haven't I'll——"

What he would have done will never be known, for at this juncture the waiter himself came in opportunely, and the clerk dropped the napkin and retired in short order to enjoy his own dinner, ordering an extra cup of coffee to tranquilize his nerves.

Beaconsfield and His —

A Boston man and his daughter were sitting on the front piazza, when the father requested his daughter to read him the evening paper.

"What shall I read about?" queried the Boston girl as she opened the paper.

"Read the European news," responded the father.

The Boston girl began: "It is rumored that Beaconsfield will not accept the decoration of the"—and then she blushed a deep red and stopped.

"Proceed," said the father, after a pause.

"I cannot," returned the Boston girl blushing still deeper.

"Why not?" queried the father, in some surprise.

"Because I do not like to," replied the Boston girl, painfully.

"Nonsense," exclaimed the father, sternly; "read the item, I tell you."

The Boston girl caught up the paper in desperation, stared at it in a stony manner, attempted to speak, and fainted dead away.

When she had been restored and the excitement had subsided, the father took the paper out behind the house, turned to the dreadful item and read:

"It is rumored that Beaconsfield will not accept the decoration of the garter."

LEG OF MUTTON ROAST.—A leg of mutton intended for roasting should be kept longer than for boiling; it should be carefully attended to during the time it is hung up, and constantly wiped, to prevent any dustiness gathering on the skin; below the flat, and in hot weather lightly dusted with flour and pepper, to keep off the flies. The kernel of the fat in the thick part of the leg should be taken out by the butcher, for it taints first there, and the bloody part of the neck should also be cut off when first brought in. Remove the thick skin very carefully, trim off the flank that adheres to the fat, and flatten the fat with a cutlet beater or chopper, cut off the knuckle and nick the main joint, to allow it to become more plump, as in haunch. Put a little salt and water into the dripping pan to baste the meat at first; then use only its own gravy. Serve with jelly.

A leg of mutton is easily roasted whole, but can be divided advantageously for a small family. Cut the knuckle into a good sized joint, and roast it until tender; put a coarse paste over the lower part of the thick end to keep in the gravy and roast it; or if the skin be raised gently from the outside of the leg to about six or seven inches, and two or three good slices may be cut off for steaks and the skin then fastened down with skewers.

Poison in the Peach-Stone.

Though the following item from the Scientific American is not strictly in season, it is worthy of heed and remembrance by all parents:

"A fatal case of poisoning by peach stones, which is noted in the French papers as having recently occurred in Paris, should serve as a warning to families in which children are allowed to look after themselves for hours at a time. Probably very few adults themselves know how poisonous peach stones are. The victim of the recent accident in Paris selected the stones of a number of peaches, and, obtaining a hammer, when left alone broke them open industriously and ate them; the result being that he was fatally poisoned by hydrocyanic (prussic) acid. It is well to explain what quantity of poison the peach stone possesses. Writers on toxicology state that one ounce of the kernels contain about one grain of pure prussic acid, and this quantity, it is well known, is sufficient to kill any adult person. Even two-thirds of a grain has very often proved fatal, and indeed may well be regarded as a fatal dose for any child."

Terrible itching and scaly humors, ulcers, sores, and scrofulous swellings cured by the Cuticura and Cuticura Soap (the great skin cures) externally, and Cuticura Resolvent (blood purifier) internally. Ask about them at your druggists.

Among the young ladies who sat at the receipt of customs in a western church fair, and retailed kisses at the nominal value of ten cents each, was a vinegar-visaged old maid, who had crowded herself in on the gauzy pretense that she felt it her duty to do her share toward helping along the good cause. When it came time for closing, the young ladies turned over to the church treasury from $5 to $10 apiece, while the ancient female handed in a solitary dime, the value of one kiss that she received from a blind man whose taste was so vitiated by tobacco-chewing that he was unable to detect the imposition.

Faded Colors Restored.

Faded or gray hair gradually recovers its youthful color and lustre by the use of Parker's Hair Balsam, an elegant dressing, admired for its purity and rich perfume.

A Lawyer Bulldozed.

A lawyer had a case on his docket, in which, among other things, he wished to prove that his client had no money, and to that end he cross-questioned one of the opponent's witnesses as follows:

"You asked my client for money, did you not?"

"Well—yes, sir."

"Answer promptly, sir. Let us have no hesitation. You asked him for money—now what was his answer?"

"I don't know as I can tell."

"But you don't remember?"

"Yes, sir."

"Then [illegible] answer!"

"I'd rather not tell."

"Ho! ho! You are one first-rate witness! You don't tell!"

"I should rather not, sir."

"But I should rather you would! No, sir, if you do not answer my questions promptly and truthfully I'll call upon the court to commit you for contempt."

"Well, if I must tell takes out of school here you have it. I asked him yesterday if he couldn't lend me half a dollar, and he told me he could not."

"And you believed him, did your not?"

"Yes, sir. For he said you had robbed him of every cent of his ready money, and if he didn't get out of your hands pretty soon his wife and little ones would come to——"

"That will do, sir. You can step down off the stand."

"I am Proud."

A lady patient writes from Fishkill Plains, Dutchess County, N. Y., to Dr. David Kennedy, of Roundout, N. Y.: "My foot is entirely well, and I never felt better in my life than I do now. I am proud of Favorite Remedy. Shall I continue the use?" What ailed the foot? does the reader inquire. It was diseased from impure blood. "Favorite Remedy" purified the blood and the ulcer was healed. Lose no precious time dear woman, but get the "Favorite Remedy" of your druggist, or enclose one dollar to the doctor, at the above address.

A printer's wife in Germany, while a new Bible was printing at her house, one night went into the office to alter the sentence of subjection to her husband pronounced upon Eve in Genesis iii, 16. She altered the sentence, "And he shall be thy lord" (Herr) to "And he shall be thy fool" (Narr.) For this liberty she lost her life. Copies of this edition have been bought at enormous prices. An edition of the Bible is known to book collectors as the "Vinegar Bible," from the errata which changed the reading "Parable of the Vineyard" to "Parable of the Vinegar."

Experience the Best Guide.

WHO IS UNACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THIS COUNTRY, WILL SEE BY EXAMINING THIS MAP, THAT THE

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC R'Y

Is The Great Connecting Link between the East and the West!

Its main line runs from Chicago to Council Bluffs, passing through Joliet, Ottawa, La Salle, Geneseo, Moline, Rock Island, Davenport, West Liberty, Iowa City, Marengo, Brooklyn, Grinnell, Des Moines (the capital of Iowa), Stuart, Atlantic, and Avoca; with branches from Bureau Junction to Peoria; Wilton Junction to Muscatine, Washington, Fairfield, Eldon, Bentonsport, Centreville, Princeton, Trenton, Gallatin, Cameron, Leavenworth, Atchison, and Kansas City; Washington to Sigourney, Oskaloosa, and Knoxville; Keokuk to Farmington, Bonaparte, Bentonsport, Independence, Eldon, Ottumwa, Eddyville, Oskaloosa, Pella, Monroe, Des Moines; Mt. Zion to Keosauqua, Newton to Monroe; Des Moines to Indianola and Winterset; Atlantic to Griswold and Audubon; and Avoca to Harlan and Carson. This is positively the only Railroad, which owns and operates a through line from Chicago into the State of Kansas.

Through Express Passenger Trains, with Pullman Palace Cars attached, are run each way daily between CHICAGO and PEORIA, KANSAS CITY, COUNCIL BLUFFS, LEAVENWORTH and ATCHISON. Through cars are also run between Milwaukee and Kansas City, via the "Milwaukee and Rock Island Short Line."

What will please you most will be the pleasure of enjoying your meals, while passing over the beautiful prairies of Illinois and Iowa, in one of our magnificent Dining Cars that accompany all Through Express Trains. You get an entire meal, as good as is served in any first-class hotel, for seventy-five cents.

Appreciating the fact that a majority of the people prefer separate apartments for different purposes (and the intensive passenger business of this line warranting it), we are pleased to announce that this Company runs Pullman Palace Sleeping Cars for sleeping purposes, and Palace Dining Cars for eating purposes only. Another great feature of our Palace Cars is a SMOKING SALOON where you can enjoy your "Havana" at all hours of the day.

Magnificent Iron Bridges span the Mississippi and Missouri rivers at all points crossed by this line, and transfers are avoided at Council Bluffs, Kansas City, Leavenworth and Atchison, connections being made in Union Depots.

At CHICAGO, with all diverging lines for the East and South.

DR. A. TRASK'S MAGNETIC OINTMENT.

is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures while the unparalleled demand with which it stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.
The most incredulous are convinced, and the skeptical are compelled to believe in the virtues of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.
PILES, CUTS, BRUISES, BURNS, SCALDS, SORE THROAT, LAMENESS, RHEUMATISM, INFLAMMATION of LUNGS and BOWELS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, SALT RHEUM, BLAINS, AFFECTIONS of the SPINE, KIDNEYS, NERVOUS IRRITATION, and all disorders attendant with INFLAMMATION.
It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates every portion of the human frame; every tissue, vein, nerve, and ligament is searched out and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years
This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its virtues is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have never used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should feel perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Some New Thoughts on Marriage.

Marriage is, to a man, at once the happiest and saddest event of his life. He quits all the companions and associations of his youth, and becomes the chief attraction of a new home. Every former tie is loosened, the spring of every hope and action is to be changed, and yet he flies with joy to the untrodden paths before him. Then woe to the woman who can blight such joyful anticipations, and wreck the bright hopes of the trusting, faithful, fragrant, masculine blossom, and hang his head against the sink, and throw him under the cooking range, and kick him into a three-cornered mass, and then sit down on him.

Little do women realize that all a man needs under the broad cerulean dome of heaven is love—and board and clothes. Love is life. If some woman or other don't love him, and love him like a hired man, he pines away and eventually climbs the golden stair. Man is born with strong yearnings for the unyearnable, and he does not care so much for wealth as he does for some one who will love him under all circumstances and in all conditions.

If women would spend their evenings at home with their husbands, they would see a marked change in the brightness of their homes. Too many sad-eyed men are wearing away their lives at home sewing buttons on. But enough of this. We would that we had a pen of fire to write in letters of living light the ignominy, and contumely and—some more things like that, the names of which have escaped our memory, that are to-day being visited upon our sex.

Remember that your husband has the most delicate sensibilities, and keenly feels your coldness and neglect. The former may be remedied by toasting the feet over a brisk fire before going to bed, but the latter can only be remedied by a total reform on your part. Think what you promised his parents when you sued for his hand. Think how his friends, and several girls to whom he had at different times been engaged, came to you with tears in their eyes and besought you to be kind to him. Do these things ever occur to you as you throw him over the card table and mop the floor with his remains? Do you never feel the twinges of remorse after you have put an octagon head on him for not wiping the dishes drier? Think what a luxurious home you took him from and how his mother used to polish his boots and take care of him, and think what drudgery you subject him to now. Think on what pain it must cause him when you growl and swear at him. Perhaps when you went away to your work you did not leave him wood and coal and water; does he ever repine at your neglect?

Ah, if wives knew the wealth of warm and true affection locked up in the bosoms of their husbands, and would draw it out, instead of allowing the pert and unprincipled hired girl to get all the benefit, what a change there would be in this world of ours! But they never do until the companion of their joys and sorrows has winged his way to the evergreen shore and takes charge of the heavenly orchestra, and then for about two weeks you will see a violently red proboscis glimmering and sparkling under a costly black veil, after which the good qualities of the deceased will be preserved in alcohol, to be thrown up to No. 2 in the bright days to come.

Then, in conclusion, wives in Israel and other railroad towns, love your husbands while yet it is time. Give him your confidence. If your active corn manifests a wish to leave the reservation, go to your husband with it. Lean on him. He will get a wood rasp and make that corn look sick. He is only waiting for your confidence and your trust. Tell him your business affairs, and he will help you out. He will, no doubt, offer to go without help in the house in order to economize, and he will think of numberless other little ways in which to save money. Do as we have told you and your lives will be one great combination of rare and beautifully dissolving views. You will journey down the pathway of your earthly existence with the easy poetical glide of the fat man who steps on the orange peel. Your last days will be surrounded with a halo of love, and as your eyes get dim with age, and one by one your teeth drop out, you can say with pride that you have never, never gone back on your solid pard.—BILL NYE, in the Laramie Times.

How to Cook Hominy.

Every cook will promise you she can do this, but it is quite safe to say that not one in fifty will. Indeed, people live to old age in this, our famous corn-growing region, without having ever tasted well cooked hominy. It is usually started well enough, but stirred so often and so vigorously that the grains, instead of standing out snowy and well-done, yet round and separate, are mingled in one gluey mass. Having once seen and tasted the former, you will never be reconciled to the latter. Try to prepare it in this way: A quart of ground hominy is a sufficient quantity to prepare well in any ordinary cooking utensil; it is better to soak for a while before cooking; put over the fire and cover well with water; do not allow it to boil rapidly, and if the fire is a sufficient one for baking, it is better to keep a lid beneath it. It cannot be hurried, and here is where many fail in its preparation. After the grains swell and begin to soften, on no account stir it. The water put in at first should be sufficient to finish it, but if there has been too little, add more, carefully, that it may be just enough and not too much, thus making your almost perfect dish sloppy. Do not salt it until just before taking from the stove. Early salting will make it dark. If it could be cooked in a double vessel, the outer one containing boiling water, so much the better for both hominy and cook. Such vessels save the care of constant watching. Care and experience must always go together toward the making of a perfectly cooked dish, and nothing gives better satisfaction.

WILLING TO CRADLE.—That was a sharp remark made by a lady teacher to a School Commissioner a short time ago. The Commissioner had been elected in the interest of reform, and his perpetual hobby was the reduction of teachers' salaries. The lady remonstrating against further reduction, said, to enforce her argument, that they could not live on less, as they were idle so long during vacation in the summer time. "You should do as my brother-in-law does," said the commissioner. "He teaches school in the country, and during vacation makes his living by cradling." "We would gladly cradle, too," was the arch reply, "but it is necessary first to get husbands." There was no further talk of reduction on that occasion.

Also one other piece or parcel of land situate in the village of Hudson, county of Lenawee, and state of Michigan, described as situated on section nineteen in said township, commencing on the south line of land deeded by Ann B. Cobb to Rosen Cayo, and the north-east corner of the east division of fractional section nineteen and running thence northerly and parallel with the line of fractional till it strikes the southern angle line of land deeded by Harvey Cobb to David Pratt, and running thence westerly on said Pratt's line till it intersects the east line of land now owned by John W. Pierce, thence southerly till it reaches the southeast corner of said Pierce's lot; thence westerly on the south line of said Pierce's lot to a point forty rods west of the line first above described and mentioned as a part of the boundary; thence southerly on a line parallel with the first described line to the north line of Robert Laird's land at a point four rods west of the place of beginning; thence easterly on said Laird's north line to the place of beginning, to secure the payment of one hundred and twenty-two dollars and the interest to accrue thereon. Said mortgage was, on the 23d day of April, 1858, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for Lenawee county, in Liber "U" of mortgages, on folios 276, 277 and 278. This mortgage was, on the 29th day of October, 1857, duly assigned by said Elihu L. Clark to John M. Osborn, which assignment was on the 25th day of October, 1867, duly recorded in said Register's office in Liber 50 of mortgages, on pages 762 and 763. Default has been made in the conditions of said mortgage by the non-payment of the moneys due thereon by which the power of sale therein contained has become operative. There is now claimed to be due and unpaid on said mortgage the sum of two hundred and fourteen and seventy-five hundredths dollars, and no proceeding has been instituted at law or in equity to recover said sum or any part thereof. FARMERS IN COUNCIL.

pected to take care of itself, and if any class is deprived of their just rights in legislation, it is to a certain extent their own fault. Last winter a bill was introduced in the legislature to prohibit the building of barbed wire fences by railroad companies. It failed because 14 out of 30 farmers in the House would not support it. There is no class more in need of co-operation than the farming community. One of the main questions for us to decide now is "How can a more thorough co-operation be brought about, having for its object the advancement of the agricultural interests of the State."

Music by the Glee Club.

Remarks by Justus Lowe, of Ridgeway.

Song by Prof. Thomas of the Fairfield Glee Club.

Remarks by Rev. Kershow.

Solo by Miss Josie Clarkson.

Then followed a lecture by Prof. R. C. Kedsie on the Ripening of Wheat.

He described at length the experiments he had made of cutting wheat for twenty-one days in succession, commencing with the formation of the berry and ending when the berry was fully ripened. He began cutting June 26. A sample of each day's cutting was preserved in a bottle and these samples were shown to illustrate his lecture. He weighed the grain each day and counted the number of grains to the drachm. From the first day's cutting to the fifteenth there was a gradual increase, and after that, there was a falling off. From which he reasoned that the best time to cut wheat was about the fifteenth day after the berry began to form, or as soon as the berry can be mashed between the thumb and finger without staining. At the close of the lecture several questions were asked, all of which were promptly answered.

Music by the Choir.

Then followed an essay by Mrs. W. R. Wilson upon "Educated Labor."

In reading the pages of history we find that the education of the laboring classes has always been opposed by the nobility or aristocratic element of society. The latter contend that education unfits the children of toil for their station in life, that the less intelligent the servant the more obedient he is. This rule may be a good one in the despotisms of the old world, but it cannot thrive under a Republican form of government. Here education must go hand in hand with every avocation in life. It has been said that no man can earn more than $1.00 per day. If he gets more he is paid for his knowledge, not his manual toil. If this be true, how important that all labor should receive a proper education. Ignorant labor has few wants to supply and hence is content with low wages. The opponents of education say that schools spoil children for labor, make them discontented and idle. These objections are chiefly aimed to-day against higher institutions of learning, but they were formerly made against primary schools. A respect for labor should be instilled into the minds of the young, and a disrespect for idleness.—Let us bear in mind Beecher's saying "It is not work that kills men; it is money. Work is healthy. You can hardly put more on a man than he can bear. Money is rust upon the blade. It is not the revolution that destroys the machinery, but the friction." Workmen, as a class, not their tools, determine the dignity of their employment. Intelligence and moral worth ennobles all labor. With the rapid increase of population and the marvellous growth of our cities, opening opportunities for ambitious young men, is it any wonder that many are drawn away from the old farms. And yet they often greatly err. Many a good farmer has been spoiled to make a poor lawyer or an unsuccessful merchant. Still this exodus should not be wholly stopped for all the professions and departments of trade have been enriched and vitalized by these contributions from the farm. But as our country grows older more intelligence and skill are demanded for both the farm and shop. The lower the condition of a people the less inclination there is to work. Among savage tribes little labor is performed. Schooling, perhaps, may spoil some people, but multitudes more are spoiled for the want of it. In all our endeavors we should work with a will and cultivate a desire to educate the mind. Then we shall "Live to make life grand and noble,

Live to make it pure and true,
Learn to act our own part bravely,
Learn to think and learn to do."

Music by the Glee Club.

Mrs. Edwin Howell presented a question on Mrs. Wilson's paper. Are not all efforts of the will the result of educated labor?"

A discussion followed which was participated in by Prof. Baird, Prof. Kedsie, C. E. Mickley, Thomas F. Moore and others.

Music by the Glee Club.

Mr. J. W. Baker offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That it is the duty of our legislature to make suitable provision that our daughters may have all the advantages at the Agricultural College given to our sons.

It was adopted almost unanimously by a rising vote.

Adjourned for supper.

Next came a recitation by Miss Hilda Pennington, of Macon.

A paper on "Roads" was then given by Prof. George H. Harrower, of the Agricultural College.

He spoke for the most part on the economical and historical aspects of his subject. We do not often stop to consider what is the underlying truth about these highways along which we go from place to place, to town meeting, to market, to the neighbors. We have not said all about the road when we tell where it runs, what is its condition, and how it is manipulated. Besides all this it is a sign of civilization, for civilization, if it means anything, means interchange of ideas and opinions. Knowledge of what lies beyond the horizon of our farm, our town, our region. In the market town, in the post on many coasts mind rubs against mind, the range of men's thoughts is widened. The extension of means of communication leads to an increase of material comfort, the maintenance of law and order. Among the few founders of civilization we must place the road maker. The existence and character of public thoroughfares in ancient times was then briefly sketched. The greatness of Rome left no more striking memorial than the roads which linked every part of those vast dominions to the imperial city, and portions remain to this day as perfect as when first put down. Beginning at Scotland, the Romans could travel by post to Antioch, a distance of nearly 4000 miles, interrupted only by the passage of the English channel and the Hellespont. With the middle ages came the disuse and dilapidation of these roads. Society went backward in many ways. In this connection the dogma of protection was referred to as having taken rise in that dark period. As in contradiction of the very idea that underlies roadmaking in its widest sense, protection was consistently adopted in a day when road-making was neglected. To-day we spend money and inventive genius to perfect means of communication, to cheapen freights, and then we raise a wall of a prohibitive tariff. But when turnpikes were first introduced into England, the counties around London petitioned against their extension, lest outer counties take possession of the market of the metropolis. In conclusion the speaker referred to the practical importance of good roads in a community, spoke of the present highway statutes, and proposed changes in the same.

Music by a quartette club from Tecumseh.

Mr. E. L. Russell, of Raisin, then read a paper on "Mistakes."

I do not intend to speak of the mistakes of Moses, or Bob Ingersoll, but of the mistakes incident to common mortals in everyday life. Mistakes are of human origin. Man alone gropes his way in uncertainty and doubt. His blunders are both sad and ridiculous. How can they be avoided is the question. A successful farmer must have reason and judgement, for he must be his own teacher to a certain extent. Experience, though a dear teacher, teaches him that poor seed, poor stock, poor soil and poor cultivation will result in failure. Experiments should be made and records of the same kept, so that results may be carefully compared. By these means farmers can avoid many of the mistakes they now make, for each man will have his neighbor's experience as well as his own to guide him. Mistakes have ruined many farmers, but often these are caused by idleness, sloth and dissipation. As a general rule at this day, work on the farm is done with care and good judgment. There are none of the necessaries of life, and but few of the luxuries that are not grown and manufactured at home. If I were to classify the mistakes of farmers I would name them as follows:

1st.—Lack of interest and pride in his origin and calling. A proper interest in his trade would lead him to be prudent in his actions, firm in his resolves. It would lead him to read good and practical books and thus improve himself in his calling, to both think and act for himself and to profit by the experience of others.

2d.—A lack of unity of action, by which other classes in the community rob the farmer of his influence and property. When a nation neglects to support and assist and protect its agriculture it makes a sad mistake. And thus farmers make a sad mistake when they allow monopoly to steal away their birthright. They have a weighty responsibility resting upon them, a charge to fulfil, a duty to perform. They have not only their own rights to protect, but also the welfare of the nation. The hopes of the future of this great nation rest upon them. Vigilance is the price of liberty. No crowned head ever dared to impose such a tax upon his subjects as is imposed upon the farmers of this country by Monopoly. He owns your railroads and large empires of fertile land. He holds in his grip the plaster bed, the coal mine and the oil well. He stands at the granary door and levies a tax upon every bushel of grain. The remedy for these evils is in the hands of the farmers, if they have the nerve to apply them. Let them organize and co-operate together for their own interests and they will overthrow these evils.

Music by the Glee Club.

Music by the Tecumseh quartette.

Remarks by S. C. Stacy.

Discussion of the question of Roads by Geo. W. Moore.

Music by the Glee Club.

Paper by Geo. W. Goodrich, of Clinton.

Mr. Goodrich said that in coming before the audience he was simply "Ringing the Bell" for the brakeman to "down brakes." We are to-day standing face to face with one of the worst enemies of Republican government: viz, Monopoly. Banking corporations, telegraph companies, railroad companies and boards of trade are confederated together to destroy competition. These boards of trade are becoming a veritable scourge to the American people. By gambling in grain they raise or lower the price fictitiously and bring ruin upon business men and entail loss upon the farmers. Rates of transportion are regulated by these rings. Not only this, but bogus articles of commerce are placed on the market. We have to sell good butter by the side of oleomargarine, cane syrup by the side of glucose, cider vinegar by the side of acids, and so on to the end of the chapter. Concentrated capital in the form of monopolies is the worst evil that farmers now have to contend with. But of all these the worst is the railroad monopoly. Three or four railroad kings meet together and by the arbitrary raise of freight rates strike five or ten cents from the price of every bushel of wheat the farmer sells. And yet these monopolies are supported by the farmers. The farmers should strike hands together for their own protection. The money lords of this nation shape legislation in favor of capital and against labor. Therefore I say "ring the bell," let us form ourselves into alliances and clubs. The demand of the hour is urgent. Let us band together and by the united action of the people preserve the liberties of the people from the grasp of monopolies.

Remarks of a closing character by T. F. Moore.

I. E. Phelps, of Medina, gave notice that the State Horticultural Society would meet at Hudson on the last day of February and first day of March, and extended an invitation to the farmers of this section of the county to be present.

During his remarks the speaker took occasion to compliment Mr. Moore very highly for his faithful services while on the Board of the Ionia prison.

Mr. Moore received the compliment very modestly, and briefly replied that, though he had never sought official honors, he endeavored to perform the duties faithfully of any office which his fellow citizens entrusted to his hands.

The usual votes of thanks were passed and the meeting adjourned with the singing of the doxology.

NOTES AND INCIDENTS.

The foregoing report presents in a brief and general manner the formal program of exercises as presented at the Institute, but this would convey a very imperfect idea of the real character of the meeting. We doubt whether a better locality for a farmers' reunion could have been found in Southern Michigan. It is in a rural neighborhood, to be sure, but a better or more successful lot of farmers cannot be found anywhere. The Grange Hall is admirably arranged for a meeting of this kind, having a good audience room in the second story and a commodious dining room on the lower floor. Knowing the character of our Macon friends for hospitality and good cheer, we arranged our plans to take in the entire show, to be there from the time the gavel called the meeting to order until the curtain was rung down on the last act. Having read all the proof and given the boys their orders for the day, we went out on the street last Thursday forenoon to catch a ride to the scene of action. Found Mr. R. Hall just starting for home, and accepted a kind invitation from her to ride as far as her home. After partaking of a good square dinner with Mr. and Mrs. Hall, we proceeded with Mr. Hall to the Institute. The afternoon program was opened soon after our arrival and increased in interest throughout the entire session. The central thought of the afternoon session was this: Whether ladies should be admitted to the agricultural college, and the sentiment of the meeting was strongly in favor of their admission. At 5 o'clock came a "pic-nic supper," as it was called on the program. We should call it the squarest kind of a square meal. At all events the company did full justice to it, and were well satisfied with their entertainment. The evening program was a fine one. The interest seemed to gather strength as the meeting proceeded. That night we were domiciled at M. J. Martin's, where we got a splendid breakfast and a still better dinner the next day. Such buckwheat cakes we never did see.

Friday's session was opened at one o'clock P. M. The papers presented that afternoon were excellent and the discussions very interesting. Another pic-nic supper arrived at five o'clock, at which over five hundred people were fed, and there were several baskets full remaining after the last guest had been provided for. A red-hot session, which lasted over two hours on Friday evening, closed the meetings.

The music was splendid and was a prominent feature of the Institute. The Weston Glee Club, composed of Prof. B. P. Thomas, L. P. Russell, and J. P. Telford, rendered valuable assistance. G. B. Horton, a fourth member of the club was unable to be present, but their singing was very fine, nevertheless. We understand that the club have consented to give a concert at the Grange Hall some three or four weeks hence. Miss Julia Easlick presided at the organ very efficiently, while I. S. Osborn, DeWitt Martin, Miss Josie Clarkson and other Macon musicians rendered valuable aid. On Thursday evening two quartettes were given by a Tecumseh club consisting of Messrs. Steinhoff and DePuy and Misses Stevens and Fowler.

The literary part of the program was unexceptional. The papers were of decided merit all of them, and many of them were much better than we had expected to hear. And right here we must pay Thos. F. Moore a compliment for the happy manner in which he conducted the meetings. He makes an admirable presiding officer, possessing the faculty to an unusual degree of always saying just the right thing in just the right place, to keep business moving along expeditiously and smoothly.

The representatives of the college gave interesting lectures which were well received. Dr. Kedsie labored under quite a disadvantage on account of the sickness of his son; he received a telegram just before his lecture, requesting him to hasten home.

The southern part of the county sent several solid representatives, among whom were T. F. Moore, C. E. Mickley, Geo. W. Moore and I. E. Phelps, while the towns immediately adjoining Macon sent up a host to the feast. It is impossible to name them all, for it would make a string of names longer than the list of depositors in the Peoples' bank. The attendance both days was very large and everyone seemed to be imbued with the spirit of the occasion. The several committees in charge are entitled to great credit for the efficiency with which they performed their duties. To I. S. Osborn is due the credit for working up the musical portion of the entertainment, which added so much to the interest of the sessions. J. W. Baker of the executive committee had general charge of the literary part of the program, and his work too was well done. In fact all the committees performed well their allotted parts, and all contributed something towards making the Institute a gratifying success. Another feature of the Institute was the harmony that prevailed throughout. There was plenty of plain talk, but no harsh talk, plenty of discussion but no quarreling. It is no flattery to say that it was a grand meeting and our Macon neighbors have good reason to congratulate themselves upon the remarkably successful issue of their enterprise.

WASHINGTON NOTES.

THE ASSASSIN'S DOOM.

At 10 o'clock Saturday morning the prisoner Guiteau was seated in the dock. The judge and counsel were in their places. Judge Cox, after an appeal for delay from Mr. Scoville, decided against the motion of the defense for a new trial, pronouncing the grounds upon which it was urged insufficient. The prisoner was then ordered to rise, and was asked the formal question whether he had anything to say why sentence should not be pronounced upon him. Guiteau arose, pale and excited, and said,

"I am not guilty of the charge set forth in the indictment. It was God's act, not mine, and God will take care of it, and don't let the American people forget it. He will take care of it, and every officer of this government, from the executive down to that marshal, taking in every man on that jury and every member of this bench, will pay for it, and the American nation will roll in blood if my body goes into the ground and I am hung. The Jews put the despised Galilean in the grave. For the time they triumphed, but at the destruction of Jerusalem, forty years afterward, the Almighty got even with them. I am not afraid of death. I am here as God's man. Kill me to-morrow, if you want. I am God's man, and I have been from the start."

"You have been convicted of a crime so terrible in its circumstance, and so far-reaching in its results, that it has drawn upon you the horror of the whole world and the execrations of your countrymen. The excitement produced by such an offense made it do easy task to secure for you a fair and impartial trial, but you have had the power of the United States treasury and of the government in your service, to protect your person from violence and to procure evidence from all parts of the country. You have had as fair and impartial a jury as ever assembled in a court of justice. You have been defended by counsel with a zeal and devotion that merits the highest encomium, and I certainly have done my best to secure a fair presentation of your defense. Notwithstanding all this, you have been found guilty. It would have been a comfort to many people if the verdict of the jury had established the fact that your act was that of an irresponsible man. It would have left the people a satisfying belief that the crime of political assassination was something entirely foreign to the institutions and civilization of our country; but the result has denied them that comfort. The country will accept it as a fact that that crime can be committed, and the court will have to deal with it with the highest penalty known to the criminal code to serve as an example to others. Your career has been so extraordinary that people might well, at times, have doubted your sanity, but one can not but believe that when the crime was committed you fully understood the nature of the crime and its consequences—(Guiteau—"I was acting as God's man")—and that you had moral sense and consciousness enough to recognize the moral iniquity of such an act."

"Your own testimony shows that you recoiled with horror from the idea. You say that you prayed against it. You say that your conscience warned you against it, but by the wretched sophistry of your own mind you worked yourself up against the protest of your own conscience. What motive could have induced you to this act must be a matter of conjecture. Probably men will think that some fanaticism or morbid desire for self-exaltation was the real inspiration for the act. Your own testimony seems to controvert the theories of your counsel. They have maintained and thought, honestly, I believe, that you were driven against your will by an insane impulse. The testimony showed that you deliberately resolved to do it, and that your deliberate and misguided will was the sole impulse. This may seem insanity to some persons, but the law looks upon it as a wilful crime. You will have due opportunity of having any errors I may have committed during the course of trial passed upon by the court in banc; but, meanwhile, it is necessary for me to pronounce the sentence of the law—that you be taken hence to the common jail of the district, from whence you came, and there be kept in confinement, and, on Friday, the 30th day of June, next, you be taken into the place prepared for your execution, within the walls of said jail, and there, between the hours of 12 and 2 p. m., you be hanged by the neck until you are dead, and may the Lord have mercy on your soul."

Guiteau, during the reading, stood with his eyes fixed upon the judge, but when the final words were spoken, he struck the table violently and shouted:

"And may the Lord have mercy on your soul I'd rather stand where I do than where the jury does, and where your honor stands. I'm not afraid to die. I stand here as God's man, and God Almighty will curse every man who has had a part in procuring this unrighteous verdict. Nothing but good has come from Garfield's removal, and that will be the verdict of posterity on my inspiration. I don't care a snap for the verdict of this corrupt generation. I would rather a thousand times be in my position than that of those who have hounded me to death. I shall have a glorious flight to glory, but that miserable scoundrel, Corkhill, will have a permanent job down below, where the devil is preparing for him."

The prisoner then fell into an easy conversation with his brother. After a few minutes' delay he was removed to the jail and a guard placed over him. This will be continued until the day of the hanging.

RIDGEWAY.

The pipe organ ordered a few months since for the M. E. church will be ready in about four weeks.

Quarterly meeting next Saturday and Sunday.

Alden Wickham addressed the young people last Sunday evening.

Six students are now learning to read the tick of the telegraph instrument on our local line.

Those on the sick list this week are Rufus Raymond, Frank Temple and Mrs. Geo. Pocklington. The latter is afflicted with something similar to a paralytic shock.

In boring for water for the new stave factory at Britton, at the depth of about 40 feet a layer of quicksand was found, and the result is an overflowing well.

The church social last Friday evening was one of the best. The next will be held at the church next week Friday evening.

Eugene (Sackett) Linn, who lived several years with Geo. Linn in this community, and a relation of his wife, has just learned of a legacy of $24,000 to which he has fallen heir by the death of a wealthy uncle. Eugene left here a few years since and located a farm near Cadillac, where he now lives. He is an A No. 1 boy and will make good use of his unexpected fortune.

A little son, aged about 10, of Wm. Covil had his thumb on his left hand so terrible mangled last week that it became necessary to have it amputated. While untying a horse in the stable it drew back and the strap caught his thumb in such a manner as to draw it through the hole in the manger.

WEST TECUMSEH.

The following we clip from the Detroit Free Press. While Vanburen county can boast of the longest farmers' telegraph line Lenawee county can boast of the largest wheat crops. Our telegraph is purely a farmers' telegraph not being connected with any village, but perhaps it may be some day.

That farmers' telegraph line mentioned in The Free Press a few days ago as connecting the residences of W. B. Keyser and R. J. W. Bowen, in the town of Tecumseh, Lenawee Co., (one-half mile long) is not the only one in the world, or in Michigan either, operated by farmers. For the past eight years there has been in operation a line of telegraph from the village of Paw Paw, Van Buren Co., leading out into the country eight miles, connecting with about 25 farmers' residences. It was constructed by farmers and for their own convenience. It has been very useful as a means of communication between themselves as well as the village. Doctors have been summoned by it, and prescriptions made through it too. Now, old Lenawee, you must do better than that or give it up. Van Buren county is yet ahead in farmers' telegraphs. The farmers of this county do not propose to be outdone in any convenience or improvement.

FARMERS' CLUB.

The Farmers' Social Club met Feb. 8th at I. H. Schreder's. The house was filled to overflowing, and it looks as though we might need a farmers' hall. The program was good.

Mr. Schreder's paper upon the subject "How to keep the boys and girls contented on the farm," was good and abounded with good advice to parents. The principal point being to appreciate their children and treat them as they would have liked to have been treated when young.

Fred Hendershot opened the discussion. He is a young man and not used to leading discussions, but his remarks were good. Being a boy he could tell how he could be kept contented at home. Did not think "all work and no play" was quite the way. Among other things he wanted the privilege of obtaining a good education.

He was followed by Miss Fred Griswold, and a number of others made remarks.

The following is the program for next meeting:

Music.
Rec.—Minnie Rector.
Inst. Music.
Dec.—Geo. Henderson.
Essay—Miss Hattie Long.
Select Reading—Mrs. John Fisher.
Song—S. E. Hendershot.
Question—What is the best material for barn building, price included.

During the discussion of this question the ladies will be allowed the privilege of retiring to a separate room to discuss culinary arts.

Meeting adjourned to meet Friday evening, Feb. 24th, at Mr. F. V. Horton's,

MRS. F. C. RECTOR, Secretary.

THE NEW TAX BILL.

At the last session of the legislature a bill was passed authorizing the Governor to appoint a commission to revise the tax laws, and to prepare a bill to be submitted to a future session. In accordance with that bill Gov. Jerome appointed Messrs. John Moore, E. O. Grovenor, Wm. Chamberlain, C. A. Kent and H. H. Hatch such commissioners. These gentlemen have prepared a bill which they have reported to the Governor, and which is to be submitted to a special session of the legislature, called to meet on the 23d of the present month.

This bill proposes some radical changes from the present methods of levying and collecting taxes, but whether they would prove advantageous or not, we are not prepared to say. Those of our readers who are best posted regarding the workings of the present tax law, will be better able to judge.

In the matter of exemptions, very slight changes are proposed. Instead of certain exemptions of specific property, as in the existing law, a general exemption is proposed of $200 in value of any kind of property. Church property exempt is confined to churches and the lots on which they stand, and parsonages owned by religious bodies regularly incorporated. Furniture in dwelling houses to value of $200 is exempted, also musical instruments to value of $150, and personal property used in connection with any business to the value of $200. The personal and real property of any person who in the opinion of the supervisor is unable, by reason of poverty to contribute to the public charges, may also be exempt.

The matter of ascertaining the taxable property of each person is one that always presents great difficulties, and in this some new methods are proposed. The supervisor may require every person to make a full and detailed statement in writing, of his taxable property, real and personal, of every kind and nature, including bonds, mortgages, and all credits of all kinds, bank shares, stocks, moneys, personal chattels of all discriptions. If such statement is not made or is thought untrue, the supervisor may assess as he sees fit. If such person is dissatisfied with his assessment he may appeal to the board of review, where he will have to reveal under oath, and subject to rigid examination his pecuniary condition. In townships, the town board will constitute the board of review.

All taxes to be collected before the first of February unless time is extended by the township board.

Property to be assessed at its cash value, which shall be held to mean the price obtainable for it at private sale.

It is proposed to put highway taxes upon the roll the same as other taxes, but to give opportunity for the tax to be worked out, as at present, a receipt being given by the highway commissioner for the work, which shall be good to the tax collector as so much money.

In the matter of the sale of land for delinquent taxes, some changes are proposed. Delinquent lands are to be returned to the Auditor General's office, as under the present law. The Auditor General, as soon after the first day of July in each year as practicable, to file a petition to the circuit court for each county in chancery, with a description of the delinquent lands in such county, praying for a decree against said land for the amount of tax and charges specified, and that in default the said lands be sold. This provides for an adjudication of the validity of every tax before sale, and that parties interested may appear in court and contest such tax. The sale, when made, is to be without redemption, but the time of the sale is to come at the end of the period now fixed for redemption. After the issuing of the deed, the courts may put the purchaser in possession. The notice of the beginning of judicial proceedings, and for sale, will be by publication, and boards of supervisors may make such other provision for notifying tax-payers, as they may deem wise.

These are the main, or more important features of the bill, at least so far as they differ from the present law.

The sale of lands delinquent for taxes, under our present law, has made a great deal of trouble in the past; whether the new plan would work better or prove more effective, is an open question. It would make more work for the courts and the lawyers, and would probably result in giving valid titles to the lands sold for taxes, which has been very difficult under the present system.

"BOOMING."

Of Yankee inventions, most noted this year,
A verbal monstrosity's booming.
That constantly grates like a saw on the ear,
And the pet is a "boom," that is "booming."

As verb and as noun it is equally free;
Thus "to boom" means to set things "a booming,"
And a "boom" means a "boom," as one plainly may see,
And stands no grammatical grooming.

[illegible]
'Tis a lager "boom," Champagne "boom," or whisky
And they "boom" all the night with their "booming" today be,
"Booming" right along, "boomingly" frisky.

Miss Eunice McFlimsey's silks, and all that
Look stunningly "booming" or sappy,
Who "boomed" in a broadcloth and "boomed" in a hat,
And both are most "boomingly" happy.

No "booming" misfortune can baffle!
She sweetly acknowledges sharing his "boom"
And "booming" they "boom" to the altar!

The meadows are "booming" with verdure and flow'rs,
The rivulet "boomed" down the valley,
The roses are "booming" in sweet sunshine bow'rs,
And John's love is "booming" for Sally.

Our commerce is "booming" on every sea,
Our finances are "booming" securely,
All values are "booming" as "booming" can be,
And "boomed" good times coming surely.

Political "booms" are the style to a dot,
And the "Grant boom" enthused both the sections;
But the "boomiest" "boom" of the whole "booming" lot
Was the "boom" of the fall elections.

Our flag is a "booming" Columbia whoops
Our "booming" old eagle triumphantly swoops
And soars to the world's admiration!

This "boom" of my muse is a "booming" bad "boom"
As the "booming" mad reader discovers,
And sends me a "booming" to Tartarus gloom
For running a "boom," like my brothers.

Not a "boomlet" one from my Faber,
Find the "boomiest" "boom" of the "booms" I have writ
Has "out-boomed" the "boom" of my neighbor!

WHAT JOHN HARDING THOUGHT.

A STORY FOR THE GENTLEMEN.

"In some things women are so silly and ridiculous!"

Here John Harding laid down the magazine article he had been reading and which had for its theme the apparently inexhaustible one—the follies and shortcomings of the sex to which he had alluded.

Mrs. Harding glanced from the bow she was fashioning to the solemn face of the speaker.

"In some things? That is encouraging surely! I've known such quantities of men that were silly and ridiculous in so many. What is it now, I wonder?"

"Oh!"

"Not only devoid of common sense but of all artistic elegance and beauty."

"Really, John," retorted Mrs. Harding drawing her needle through her work with so much energy as to snap the thread, "however silly a woman may be in your estimation, I think they might know how and in what style to dress."

"They might, I suppose," was the cool response; "but that they don't is very evident. Have you read 'Dress as it Relates to Health and Beauty,' in the last Monthly?"

"No," responded Mrs. Harding, with a toss of the head. "It was written by some man, I suppose."

"No matter who it was written by; it is sound sense, every word of it." I wish you would study that article, Mary; it would do you an immense deal of good. I don't mean to say that you haven't sense in a good many things, which surprises me all the more that you should show so little in the way you dress."

Mrs. Harding's red cheeks grew still redder.

"John Harding!"

"There, now, Mary, don't fly into a passion because I tell you the truth, all for your own good. Just look at the trimming on the skirt of your dress, for instance; according to all artistic rules, the line should be unbroken, from waist to feet, and here it is cut up and destroyed in half-a-dozen places?"

"Have you ever seen me in a dress whose skirt is entirely plain, or, as you term it, with the line unbroken from waist to feet?"

"No; but I should be glad to do so."

"You would? Have you any further complaint to make? If you have I beg that you won't be backward about stating it."

"I don't mean to be. There's the hat you wear. That is what you call it, I suppose, though for any use it performs it might as well be called most anything else; a mass of ribbons, feathers and flowers, piled up as high as possible, and worn upon the back of the head."

"Anything further?"

"Yes. Look at the way the hair is worn by nine-tenths of the ladies—yours among 'em, part of it in a snarl on the forehead and the rest braided and festooned at the back of the head."

"How would you have me arrange it?"

"Why simply drawn back from the forehead and coiled low at the back of the head so as to preserve its classic outline. Something the way it is in that picture. See?"

Mrs. Harding glanced at the picture to which her husband pointed, that of a very lovely girl, with small regular features, and whose wavy hair was loosely knotted at the back.

"Yes, I see. But I don't think you ever saw my hair dressed in that style."

"It would be an immense improvement if you would dress it so; you'd look like quite another person."

I think I should. But have you no further suggestions to make? Your ideas are so original that they interest me."

"Not at present," returned Mr. Harding, biting off the end of a cigar, he intended to light as soon as he got out on the steps.

A few minutes later, he put his head back into the room where his wife was sitting:

"I shall be around with the ponies at three, Mary. Don't keep me waiting."

Mrs. Harding belonged to that large class of ladies whose attractions depend more or less on style of dress, and no one understood this more clearly than she. She knew her strong and weak points, and how to bring out the one and conceal the other. For instance, she had fine eyes, hair and complexion, but her features were rather irregular, her forehead especially being out of proportion with the rest of the face, and the form wanting in roundness of outline. But so skillfully were these defects remedied by the adjustment of the hair and dress that they were scarcely noticed, and she was considered by all who knew her—her husband not excepted—to be an attractive and very charming woman.

Mrs. Harding spent the greater part of the morning in the attic overhauling a chest that had belonged to her husband's aunt; apparently well repaid for her trouble by the garments fished up out of its dark depths, and which she carried to her own room. Out of one of these she fashioned a dress very similar in style to the one for which her husband had expressed so much admiration.

"I hate to disfigure myself so!" she thought, as the straight folds fell hankly around the tall, thin form, making it look still more tall and thin; "but nothing else will cure John; and if he keeps on he'll drive me frantic!"

Then she proceeded to take down the heavy braids of hair, and combing it smoothly from the forehead over the ear, arranged it in a pug low at the back of the head.

"Good gracious! I didn't suppose anything could make me look so much like a fool!" ejaculated Mrs. Harding, as she noted the change that it made in her appearance. "But no matter; it's only for once, and I guess I can stand it, if he can!"

Taking a round, flat hat, very much in vogue a few years ago, and whose only ornament was a ribbon around the crown, Mrs. Harding went down into the parlor.

She did not have long to wait. Ten minutes later John came up to the door, in an open phaeton, drawn by the well-matched grays that were the pride of his heart.

He stared at her, for a moment, in dumb amazement.

"Heavens and earth! Mary, is that you? I thought it was—I don't know what! What have you been doing to yourself?"

"I have been trying to carry out the hints you gave me this morning in regard to dress. I hope it suits you and that you admire its effect?"

"Well, no," responded Mr. Harding taking a critical survey of the odd-looking figure before him. "I can't say that I do. To speak plainly, you look like a fright!"

"I must say, John," retorted his wife with an injured air, "that you are very difficult to suit. I have spent the greater part of the morning in following the suggestions you gave me at breakfast and still you find fault. What is it now I'd like to know? Here is the unbroken sweep of skirt; the classic outline of the head—I think that is what you call it. And you surely cannot say that this hat is too high, or that its elegant simplicity—I quote your own words—is destroyed by any superabundance of flowers, feathers and ribbons."

Mr. Harding turned very red.

"That is all nonsense, Mary. I had only three hours at my disposal, and it's now half past three. I thought I should find you all ready."

"I shall be ready in half a minute," replied his wife, tying on her hat.

Mr. Harding looked at her in horrified astonishment.

"Do you think that I am going to take you out in such a dress as that? Why you look like an escaped lunatic!"

Just here the door-bell rang.

"Its Judge Howe," said Mr. Harding, as he listened to the voice, in reply to the servant who answered it. "He's come expressly to see you. For pity's sake go up stairs and put on something decent. I wouldn't have him see you in that dowdy thing for any consideration!"

"Will you promise—"

"I'll promise anything!" interposed Mr. Harding, drawing his wife towards the door which opened into the back parlor, and through which she disappeared just as their visitor was announced.

In an almost incredible short space of time Mrs. Harding entered the parlor where her husband and their guest were seated, looking so different that no one not intimately acquainted with her would have recognized her.

Mr. Harding drew a long sigh of relief as he looked at the pretty, tastily-attired woman of whom he had often spoken to his friend, Judge Howe, and to whom he was so proud to present her.

In the gay and animated conversation that followed, and all the pleasant thoughts to which it gave rise, he forgot everything else; not so with Mrs. Harding. As soon as the door closed after their visitor, she turned her laughing eyes full upon her husband's face.

"Now, John, let us have a fair and clear understanding; I want to suit you if it is a possible thing. Which of these two styles of dressing do you wish me to adopt?"

"I shouldn't suppose you'd ask such a question, Mary. Seeing you once in the peculiar costume you assumed is quite enough for me, I assure you."

"I assumed it to please you—don't forget that."

"You failed in your object, then. To speak frankly, I didn't suppose it possible for you to look so downright ugly in anything."

"You are not over complimentary," laughed Mrs. Harding. "But no matter; if you're satisfied, I am. Don't look so crestfallen, John; you are not a bit more inconsistent than the rest of your sex who give ours so much sage advice in regard to matters they know nothing about. If the wives and daughters of these modern Solomons should dress as they advise other people's wives and daughters to do, they wouldn't be seen in the street with them."

The rations given the British soldiers in the field are: a quarter of a pound of bread, a pound of fresh meat, half a pound of fresh vegetables, three quarters of a pound of flour, and, at the discretion of the commanding officer and medical staff, a pint of porter or a half gill of spirits form the daily ration. As it is not always practicable to obtain bread, fresh meat, or fresh vegetables, three quarters of a pound of biscuit, flour or rice are to be equivalent to the ration of bread, a pound of salt meat or three quarters of a pound of preserved meat substituted for the fresh meat ration, and two ounces of compressed vegetables, or a quarter of a pound of onions or leeks may take the place of the fresh vegetables.

Experience the Best Guide.

The reason why women everywhere use Parker's Ginger Tonic is because they have learned by experience—the best guide—that this excellent medicine overcomes despondency, periodical headache, indigestion, pain in the back and kidneys, and other troubles of the sex.—Home Journal.

Time Wasted in Doing Chores.

The difference between the cost and price received for farm products is not profit. In some places there is more money made in selling cattle at ten dollars each than there is in another place where they sell for fifty dollars. In the Nothern States, where cattle or sheep must be fed six or seven months of the year, what should be profit is swallowed up in the hard labor expended in the care of animals.

Stock for market should be kept growing every day of their lives. The writer by no means favors neglect, but he wishes to call attention to a few common errors in arrangement for care of Winter stock.

For the most perfect protection from fire, farm buildings should be small and scattered, one in a place, over the farm; but for convenience in the care of animals they should all be in one group. For very large farms, the extra cost of moving the hay and grain to barns and the manure back again to the fields must not be lost sight of. The corn-crib stands some rods from the barn or hog-pen, where the grain is fed out. The sheep barn is not near the cattle barn; the pig-pen is off by itself, and the chicken-coop is set in another place. The corn-stalks are loaded and stacked where they must again be loaded before feeding. The corn is carried by hand, a bushel at a time in a basket. This trip is made several times a day for months of each year. The corn is shelled, if shelled at all, by a hand sheller. In some cases the straw and stalks are cut by machinery ill adapted for the work. The arrangement requires too much hard labor. Roots are dug, drawn and buried in the field; again drawn to the barn, handled out, handled again to mix with straw, and then carried by hand to feed to animals, some of which are six or ten rods distant. Into several isolated stables the basket is lifted, over a sill two feet high, and then carried past animals to each stall. Manure is thrown out daily through numerous small openings, high upback of each stall, or it is loaded on wheelbarrows, or shoveled or thrown for some distance out the main door. From the time of cutting to feeding, more thought should be given to the saving of labor. More study should be devoted to arranging everything for convenience. Hay, straw and grain move easily when moved but a little way and then down an inclined plane.

Can not something be done, on most farms, to save time and labor in watering domestic animals? Is there not some way to save handling, once or twice out of six or eight times, all the hay and grain and coarse fodder of the farm, and yet not neglect the health and comfort of the animals?

Some farmers we know, with two men, take better care of a certain number of horses, cattle, sheep, swine and poultry, than others who employ four or six men for the same number of animals. Each set of men is equally faithful. In one case, things are handy; in the other they are not. Some have tried and like the plan of hauling manure, as it accumulates, directly from the stalls to the field. Some others are equally neat and successful with cow-stables from which the manure is removed but once in a year, those who have tried it, say the cows keep cleaner, with less bedding, than when the bedding is daily removed. There is much less offensive smell about the premises. The mangers are made to lift up as the litter accumulates. Probably most readers will condemn this plan without trying it, but the fact remains that some who have tried it will never return to the old way of removing the manure every day.

How many gates or doors are out of order or inconveniently arranged? How many steps are, several times a day, wasted for want of proper thought and management? Instead of making everything according to some plan, a little at a time is added. A shed is placed here, another there, an addition is hitched on in a place not suited for it, etc.

Perhaps the above will set the reader to thinking. If this is accomplished, something will be gained.

No Bad Habits.

A young man who was at home on a brief vacation was overheard in conversation with his mother, who expressed some solicitude concerning him. Seeking to allay her fears he said, "You needn't be alarmed for me. I haven't a single bad habit. I don't smoke, nor chew, nor drink, nor lie, nor steal, nor swear." God keep that young man. May he be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might. Let him that standeth take heed lest he fall. It is a great deal, in these days, for a young man to be able to say in truth what that young man said. It is a great thing for a young man not to have a single bad habit. And yet this should be the aim and the endeavor of every young man. He should form no bad habit. And if he has been so unwise as to form any, he should hasten to break off from it, whatever it may be. A bad habit is a bad thing. And why should a young man cling to a bad thing? He should neither smoke, nor chew, nor drink, nor lie, nor steal, nor swear, nor gamble, nor enter her doors whose house is the way to hell, leading to the chambers of death, nor break the Sabbath, nor scoff at religion, nor practice any immorality, for all these are bad things. He should carefully give heed to the admonition of the wise man: "Enter not into the path of the wicked, and go not in the way of the evil men. Avoid it, pass not by it, and pass away." Rather should he walk in the ways of wisdom, which are pleasantness, and in her paths which are peace. Thus will he have the approbation of his conscience, the esteem of all good men, and the favor of God. He will be a far happier man than if he walks in sinful paths.

CHILDREN'S IDEAS.—Children have their own way of solving great mysteries, and who shall say that science knows better than they? When it was thundering little Mary sat thinking. What to think of the awful noise she did not know. At last, however, she brightened up and said, "Mamma, I reckon God is pounding on the floor to make the people behave." Of the same kind of philosophy was the reply of the boy who gazed at the stars, and then guessed that they were gimlet holes in the floor of heaven to let the glory through.

Lady Beautifiers.—Ladies you cannot make fair skin, rosy cheeks and sparkling eyes with all the cosmetics of France, or beautifiers in the world, while in poor health, and nothing will give you such rich blood, good health, strength and beauty as Hop Bitters. A trial is certain proof.

Misplaced Gallantry.

Many of the fair sex, upon entering a car and finding all the seats occupied, expect some gentleman to resign his seat in their favor and remain standing the remainder of the journey, or until some one leaves the car, and now-a-days it is considered very rude to allow a lady to go the whole length of the car without some one offering her a seat. Now, we seem to think differently, and with all due respect to the ladies, and hoping they will not consider us unmannerly or as mortals not possessing sufficient amativeness to admire, as we undoubtedly do, the sex they adore, we will present our views on the subject.

We are of the opinion that, generally speaking, a young lady is as able to undergo the standing as a gentleman, and many of them more so, in a physical sense. It is often the case that when a man returning from his office or shop after the tiresome duties of the day, takes a car to obtain a little rest, the car gradually becomes full, and before it has traveled many squares, a belle of society, or some other female enters; custom makes it his duty to rise and stand. We think this unjust; it may be that this man has been up since six o'clock in the morning and been toiling hard the entire day, while on the other hand, the female to whom he gives his seat has slept in bed until nine or ten in the morning, and even after she arises from her slumber, whiles away the hours in her easy chair (having passed through the terrible ordeal of masticating her breakfast), perusing the latest romance; and perhaps now she is returning from some friend's residence, after spending an afternoon in giving vent to her loquacious powers, or some other easy recreation. This is clear to our minds that young lady is far more able to stand than the aforesaid man.

There is still another fact that we notice, and it is the principal feature of our subject; namely that this gallantry on the part of gentlemen is not shown to all females alike. For instance, let an old, infirm lady, may be with a basket from market (or some other cumbersome load), enter the car; it is generally the case she is left to look around, nobody seems to see her, until moved by shame some one offers her a seat. But let a young, dashing, and handsome belle enter, with her music roll, or novel, and she is hardly through the door of the car, before half a dozen gallants? will spring up and proffer her the space for which they had paid. Now, we wish to ask our readers if the old lady is not far more entitled to a seat than this youthful blade; nevertheless, that is our opinion, and we consider it the duty of every gentleman who gives up his seat, to do it for the aged and homely as well as the young and beautiful. We wish to refer also to the discourtesy ladies generally show to each other in the street cars; it is very rarely the case that a young and robust female sacrifices her seat to accomodate an older and weaker sister. When they themselves are uncharitable to one another, our opinion is that they should not be so hasty in condemning a man, who if it were not for physical debility, would gladly surrender his seat.

I purchased five bottles of your Hop Bitters of Bishop & Co. last fall, for my daughter, and am well pleased with the Bitters. They did her more good than all the medicine she has taken for six years.

Receipt for Washing Feathers.

I will give Fanny my way of washing and curling feathers. I have never tried washing any but white or black feathers. Wash in warm soap suds and rinse in water a very little blued, if the feather is white, then let the wind dry it. When the curl has come out by washing the feather or getting it damp, place a hot flat iron so that you can hold the feather just above it while curling. Take a bone or silver knife and draw the fibers of the feathers between the thumb and the dull edge of the knife, taking not more than three fibers at a time, beginning at the point of the feather and curling one-half the other way. The hot iron makes the curl more durable. After a little practice, one can make them look like new feathers. When swan down becomes soiled it can be washed and look as well as new. Tack strips on a piece of muslin and wash in warm water with white soap, then rinse and hang in the wind to dry. Rip from the muslin and rub carefully between the fingers to soften the leather.

Idle Experiments.

When a man is well and sound he can afford to be indifferent to the character of all the medicine in the world. But when disease is fairly eating him up he must do something at once and do it intelligently. Therefore do not dose yourself with a hundred things in the hope some of them may hit the mark, but try Dr. David Kennedy's "Favorate Remedy" which hits it every time. For Kidney and Liver troubles, Piles and Constipation, it is just what you want. Druggists have it, or mail one dollar to the Doctor, at Roundout, N. Y.

The largest cask in the world is the celebrated tun at Konigstein, which holds 1,869,236 pints. The top is railed in, and it affords room for twenty people to regale themselves. There are also several different kinds of welcome cups which are offered to strangers, who are invited by a Latin inscription to drink to the prosperity of the whole universe. This enormous tun was built in 1725, by Frederick Augustus, King of Poland and Elector of Saxony, who, in the inscription just mentioned, is styled "The father of his country, the Titus of his age, and the delight of mankind."

Winter Walking.

THE DELIGHTS OF A RAMBLE IN THE CRISP WINTER AIR.

The excesses and absurdities of professional "pedestrianism" will have inflicted a serious injury on the land if they make it less the fashion to "take a walk." Especially in wintry weather this most natural and pleasant form of exercise was not enough in vogue before the pedomaniacs did their worst to bring it into disrepute. And yet, who that has experienced it would exchange the exhilaration that comes from being "all in a glow" after a brisk walk through the sparkling air, for the social or merely lazy satisfaction of having had a ride? The reflections of the poet Holmes "proud pedestrian" are no fanciful sketch to real lovers of a winter's walk. The lassitude of spring and the languor of summer, which make sauntering either a necessity or a delight, now give way to the vim and vigor of health, seeking its natural expression of activity under favorable conditions. How clear and sweet is the nipping and eager air! How it inspires and sustains one in a swinging gait of four or five miles an hour! How the cheeks glow, and the eyes shine, and the muscles tingle with a delightful vigor, after such a walk through the winter sunshine!

The able-bodied man who will crouch down shiveringly in the corner of a street car in an air rank and fetid from the pack of humanity breathing and exhaling therein—when he has only two or three miles to walk, deserves to be assailed by the demons of influenza, neuralgia, coughs, colds and headaches that lurk therein. Even a ride in a buggy or sleigh robs the trip of half its benefits. The air is good, to be sure, but the exercise is lacking, and its resulting benefits to the blood and the muscular and nervous systems.

Winter walking is a sure cure for cold feet. It banishes the "creep-crawls" from the spinal column, and sends the sluggish blood about its business. As a 'nervine" it is a million times better than medicine, and for improving the complexion it is worth a whole harbor-full of lotions and washes. It will put an edge on appetite that you can't buy at the doctor's, and in promoting digestion is better than a corner drugstore's entire stock of bitters and pills. If you are physically "up to it," take a walk—not a shivering and protesting dress parade for duty, or a lazy "constitutional," but a lively turn, with a vim in it that can laugh at December's nor'wester.

Appalling Salubrity.

A young gentleman and his blushing bride, who were recently married in Philadelphia, called the next week at an apartment-house and were shown the flat that was to let by the loquacious person who officiates as janitor. This estimable woman, who would appear to be a good motherly soul, went on to illustrate how very healthy the house happened to be. "There was Mrs.—— on the first floor; she came here a bride and went away with three children, as pretty little things as ever I saw, mem. And there was Mrs.——, the second, who had a little son born to her here, mem, and fourteen months after a little daughter. And, mem, Mrs.——, the third floor, she was a bride, too, mem, and it was twins, mem, within a year. If you please, mem, I am the mother of four of the darlingest"——

"Thanks," said the bridegroom, from whom I gleaned this interesting anecdote; "after all, I think it would be better to go a little further up-town. And he led the bride—"blushing again"—into the open air and out of the healthy neighborhood.—Boston Sunday Times.

Revile Not.

If others revile, let us not revile again. Nothing is ever gained by a spirit of recrimination or anger. Kind words to an enemy are like coals of fire upon his head.

One of the most eminent men that Scotland ever produced once penned the following words in refrence to himself: "I had an early and great veneration for moral excellence, and, after having been cold or sullen in the days of my earliest youth, I have gone to bed and cried for want of moral sympathy, and from a strong resolution to be forever after kind and good, no matter how others might treat me."

There was sound philosophy in these resolutions. How much better, how much sweeter and pleasanter, is it to carry a smile upon the brow and kindness on the lips, than to carry a frown and utter bitter, bitter words!

A pleasant look costs so little that it seems wonderful, indeed, that we cannot always have one, and greet our fellow men with love and courtesy. Let us try it henceforward.

Farmers and Mechanics.

If you wish to avoid great danger and trouble, besides a no small bit of expense, at this season of the year, you should take prompt steps to keep disease from your household. The system should be cleansed, blood purified, stomach and bowels regulated, and prevent and cure diseases arising from Spring malaria. We know of nothing that will so perfectly and surely do this as Electric Bitters, and at the trifling cost of fifty cents a bottle.—Exchange. Sold by

A rapid penman can write thirty words a minute. To do this he must draw his quill through the space of a rod—sixteen feet and a half. In forty minutes his pen travels a furlong, and in five hours and a third, a mile. We make on an average sixteen curves or turns of the pen in writing each word. Writing thirty words a minute we must make 488 to each seconds; in an hour, 28,800; in a day of only five hours, 144,000, and in a year of 300 days, 43,200,000. The man who made 1,000,000 strokes with his pen a month was not at all remarkable. Many men, newspaper men for instance, make 4,000,000. Here we have in the aggregate, a mark 300 miles long to be traced on paper by each writer in a year.

Borax water will instantly remove all soils and stains from the hands, and heal all scratches and chafes. To make it, put some crude borax in a large bottle and fill with water. When the borax is dissolved, add more to the water, until at last the water can absorb no more, and a residium remains at the bottom of the bottle. To the water in which the hands are to be washed, pour enough from this bottle to make it quite soft. It is very cleansing and very healthy. By its use the hands will be kept in excellent condition—smooth, soft and white

Good Resolutions.

It would be far better that those who cannot keep good resolutions should refrain from making them; for there can be little doubt that in the process of making and then breaking them the moral fibre of a man's character becomes flaccid and relaxed. Our moral nature is so constituted that any trifling with it is fraught with injurious consequences; and those who think they may abuse it with impunity find out when achievement is much hopeless—that they have destroyed its vitality, and that they are no longer in possession of that heaven-born sense which is our best guide through life.

It cannot be too frequently urged that success is the reward of labor, and that it is a vicious and mischievous fallacy to suppose we can obtain it by any other means. A modern writer has beautifully expressed this idea; and of the many noble sentiments which Mr. Ruskin has given the world, perhaps there is not one so pregnant with deep and penetrating wisdom. In the "Stones of Venice" the following passage occurs: "Now it is only by labor that thought can be made healthy, and only by thought that labor can be made happy, and the two cannot be separated with impunity." This grand truth cannot be too earnestly taught and promulgated. Every child in the country should know it by heart, and learn to see and understand its beneficent meaning. But it is to be feared that many of those who have given up the best portion of their lives to vainly hoping for improvement without making any actual effort to attain it, are past the period when such truths can have much effect. They are wholly lost to the world of action, and live in an atmosphere of dreams and chimerical anticipations. They are the chief creators of those airy structures called "castles in the air," and are content to enjoy the empty pleasures derived from living in such fanciful edifices. No doubt they are of a mind with Pistol when he sings:

"If wishes would prevail with me,
My purpose should not fail with me."

Yes; if wishes would prevail, it would be a very lazy world indeed to live in!

We cannot contemplate without a feeling of sadness the position of those who, having thus postponed the day of reformation, find themselves face to face with the bitter reality. They are rudely awakened from the moral lethargy into which they have sunk; they have neglected to make good use of Time; but Time has played sad havoc with them.

The Solar System In Miniature.

The London Times describes an interesting invention by an Italian, Signor N. Perini, long a resident of London. For want of a better name it is called a planetarium, though vastly different from anything of that name hitherto constructed.

It is erected in the center of a room with a high ceiling. On entering the room one sees a high circular chamber, or box, standing on twelve wooden pillars. On entering underneath this chamber, and looking up, a dome is seen, deep blue and sprinkled with stars, the chief northern constellations being in their proper places, and round the base of the dome the names of the signs of the zodiac. Pendent from the top of the dome by a narrow tube is an opal globe, lit inside by gas, and representing the sun. From wires, almost invisible, the planets are suspended around the sun, of sizes and at distances approximately proportionate to the real sizes and distances, and each having its proper inclination to the plane of its orbit. The various moons are in their places, and Saturn has his rings.

The general effect on looking up at this arrangement from below is impressive, and this effect is increased when Signor Perini, by simply turning a key, sets the system in motion. The sun turns on its axis and the planets in their orbits, all in time accurately proportionate, and on watching the movements for a short time one easily realizes the immense difference in length of the years of the earth and those of the outer planets. By an ingenius watch work arrangement inside the earth, which is the size of a walnut, our world is made to revolve on its axis, the latter, by a special effort of ingenuity of Signor Perini, being always made to point to the same quarter of the heavens. The same arrangement causes the moon to revolve around the earth in its own proper orbit. Perhaps the great triumph of this invention is the fact that the planets revolve round the sun in proper elliptical orbits, which are traced around the inside of the dome. The dome is fourteen feet in diameter at its base, and fourteen feet high.

Never let them perceive that they vex you, or make you lose your self-command.

If they give way to petulance or ill-temper, wait till they are calm, and then gently reason with them on the impropriety of their conduct.

Remember that a little present punishment when the occasion arises is much more effectual than the threatening of a greater punishment should the fault be renewed.

On no account allow them to do at one time what you have forbidden, under the same circumstances, at another.

Teach them that the only sure and easy way to appear good is to be good.

Never allow of tale-bearing.

Teach them self-denial, not self-indulgence of angry and resentful spirit.

Essay on Woman.

SERIOUS FACTS IN A FUNNY VEIN.

After man came woman.

And she has been after him ever since.

She is a person of free extraction, being made of man's rib.

I don't know why Adam wanted to fool away his ribs in that way, but I suppose he was not accountable for all he did.

It costs more to keep a woman than three dogs and a shot gun.

But she pays you back with interest—by giving you a houseful of children to keep; you awake all night and smear molasses candy over your Sunday coat. Besides, a wife is a very convenient article to have about the house.

She is handy to swear at whenever you cut yourself with a razor and don't feel like blaming yourself.

Women is the superior being in Massachusetts.

There are about 60,000 more of her sex than males in that state.

This accounts for the terrified, hunted down expression of the single man who has emigrated from the east.

Woman is not created perfect.

She has her faults—such as false hair, false complexion, and so on.

But she is a great deal better than her neighbor, and she knows it.

Eve was a woman.

She must have been a model wife, too, for it cost Adam nothing to keep her in clothes.

Still, I don't think she was happy.

She couldn't go to sewing circles and air her information about everybody she knew, nor excite the envy of other ladies by wearing her new winter bonnet to church.

All these blessed privileges were denied her.

Poor Eve! she's dead.

Keep the Stables Light.

Dark stables are an abomination, and should not be tolerated. There is no necessity to sacrifice comfort, either in winter or summer, to secure enough light. A horse's eyes are enlarged—the pupil of the eye is—by being kept in a dark stable; he has a harness put on him and suddenly brought out into the bright, glaring sunlight, which contracts the pupil so suddenly as to cause extreme pain. By persevering in this very foolish and injudicious as well as cruel practice, the nerves of the eye become impaired, and if continued long enough, loss of sight will ensue. To see how very painful it is to face a bright light after having been in the dark, take a walk some dark night for a short time, till the eye becomes accustomed to the darkness, then drop suddenly into some well-lighted room and you will be scarcely able to see for a few moments in the sudden light. You know how painful it is to yourself, then why have your horse repeatedly to bear such unnecessary pain?

A dark stable is invariably a damp one, and such stables we are not yet willing to put either a valuable working or driving horse in. Give good ventilation, let the sunshine and the air have a chance to effect an entrance, and your stables will be purer and more healthy than if you take such pains to exclude them and the good influence they invariably bring with them.

Vice stings us even in our pleasures, but virtue consoles us even in our pains.

There is nothing lower than hypocrisy. To profess friendship and act enmity is a sure proof of total depravity.

The Unknown is an Ocean; and Conscience is the Compass of the Unknown. Thought, Meditation and Prayer are the three great mysterious pointings of the needle.

Character is a mosaic which takes a lifetime for its completion, and trifles, the little things of life, are the instruments most-used in preparing each precious stone for its place.

A great man under the shadow of defeat is taught how precious are the uses of adversity; and as an oak tree's roots are strengthened by its shadow, so all defeats in a good cause are but resting places on the road to victory at last.

The fountain of content must spring up in the mind, and he who has so little knowledge of human nature as to seek happiness by changing anything but his disposition will waste his life in fruitless efforts, and multiply the griefs that he proposes to remove.

"Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." True; but also out of the emptiness of the heart the mouth can speak even more volubly. He who can always find the word which is appropriate and adequate to his emotions is not the man whose emotions are deepest; warmth of feeling is one thing, permanence is another.

Don't let us be afraid of enthusiasm. There is oftener a lack of heart than brain. The world is not starving for need of education half as much as for warm, earnest interest of soul for soul. We agree with the Indian, who, when talked to about having too much zeal, said: "I think it is better for the pot to boil over than not to boil at all."

It is well known that the kidneys are the human sewers, which wash away the impurities and debris. When they become clogged or inactive, Kellogg's Columbian Oil will remove the cause and create a healthy action, and effect a permanent cure.

The Daughter at Home.

Do not think that because there comes to you no great opportunity of performing a wonderful work, you will let the thousand little ones pass you unimproved. It is no small thing to be the joy of the domestic circle—the one whose soft touch and gentle, fitly spoken words avert disturbance and make alien matters understand each other. It is no small thing to possess the happy tact which makes people pleased with themselves, and which insensibly urges people to appear their best. The young woman who is gifted with this sweet grace of touch, the swiftness of sympathy, and this beautiful unselfishness, may not have a fair face, nor a trim figure, but she will be endowed with a dignity more winning than either.

From the Novel of the Future.

"There was a loud noise like the report of an overcharged cannon, the burst boiler sent the splintered iron and steaming vapor high in the air. Marianne, the engineer's lovely daughter, was carried with the debris, and ascended with frightful velocity in the direction of the clouds. As she flew heavenward, the employes held their breath and shut their eyes—the spectacle was fearful to witness. But Young John, assistant, who had admired Marianne from afar, was alive to the emergency. Seizing a flying machine, upon which he had just obtained a patent that morning, he strapped it to his broad, manly back, and, spreading the wings of the machine, vowed he would rescue the girl of his heart or die. On he flew in the direction his loved one had taken. He reached her just as her red head had plunged through a cloud. It was but the work of a moment to clasp her to his bosom. "Saved!" came from the crowd below, who had been watching the scene through telescopes." etc.—Oil City Derrick.

A TELEPHONE STORY.—This is the latest telephone story: A proud grandmamma, who has only just been promoted to the honors of that happy relationship, is awakened in the dead of night by the inexorable bell. "Mamma, dear," comes to her in the frightened voice of her beloved but inexperienced daughter, "I am sure baby has the croup. What shall I do with it?" Gandmama replies that she will call the family doctor, and be with her anxious daughter in a moment. She awakens the doctor, and tells him the terrible news she has learned from her daughter. He in his turn requests to be put in telephonic communication with the too anxious mamma. "Lift the child to the telephone, and let me hear it cough," he commands. The child is lifted, and it coughs. "That's not the croup," he declares; and he declines to leave his house on such small matters. He advises grandmamma also to stay in bed; and, all anxiety quieted, the trio settle down happy for the night.

ETHAN ALLEN'S COURAGE.—Ethan Allen, whose misfortune it was to have a termagant for a wife, had, and deserved, a reputation for courage of the leonine kind. Some wags thought to frighten him once; but they mistook their man. One of them arrayed in a sheet, stepped in front of him in the road late one dark night when he was on his way homeward. Ethan stopped, looked at the spectre, and without a moment's hesitation exclaimed: "If you come from Heaven I don't fear you. If you are the devil, come home and spend the night with me—I married your sister." His neighbors never sought to test his courage after that. All of which comes from Vermont direct.

—WITH—

New and Increased Attractions!

The Home Magazine occupies, and has always occupied a field especially its own. While gathering for its pages from the whole range of general literature, the editor and his efficient contributors exercise the most careful discrimination in regard to quality and influence. Nothing is admitted which, in their view, can give false ideas of life, or weaken the bonds of virtue. No matter what may be the reputation, nor how brilliant the talents of the writer, if his more teachings are at all questionable, they can not find a place in our magazine.—And beyond this, its publishers claim that, in its peculiar character and varied departments, it is more thoroughly identified with the people in their every-day life and home and social interests than any other first-class periodical.

The Home Magazine for 1882 will be the most interesting and attractive that has yet appeared.

ENTERED AT THE POST OFFICE AT TECUMSEH, MICHIGAN, AS SECOND CLASS MATTER.

TECUMSEH, MICH., FEB. 16 1882.

It is not at all strange that Mayor Navin was a friend of the Wabash line. It served him a good turn in his last emergency.

As soon as the creditors of the Peoples' Bank receive their dividends wouldn't it be a good plan to invest the amount in Adrian city water bonds?

Among the important business telegrams sent to Adrian from Tecumseh last Friday was this: "How will you trade Mayors?" No reply has been received up to this date.

The Adrian Common Co[illegible] extra precaut[illegible] against [illegible] pox. Had they taken the same precaution against Knavinism it might have saved the city $31,000.

The city of Adrian is savin'
A rope for their Mayor—T. Navin,
Who lit out with a grip-sack of other men's goods.
They were quietly warming a pickle
His vertebral column to tickle
When his Honor smelled danger and took to the woods.

The Adrian Press observes that Tecumseh's ambition is to see an Uncle Tom's Cabin show, and that Hudson's is to make a lot of wheelbarrows.—Adrian, just at present, seems to be making a hobby of the water-bond business.

Blaine's controversy with the President on the South American question pales its ineffectual fires before the Adrian water bond imbroglio. Navin has kicked up a bigger rumpus than even the ambitious ex-Secretary, in his most sanguine moments, could have hoped for.

Amongst the wreck of banks and the ruin of mayors, P. T. Barnum is still on top. His baby elephant came into this world one evening last week, and mother and child are both doing well. Whether this event caused the collapse of the Adrian water-bond scheme is perhaps a question. But it is a very remarkable coincidence to say the least, that both events occurred in the same week.

They have a queer way of doing some things at Adrian. Ralph Jewell was arrested Saturday evening and bail was placed at $5,000. On Monday morning, Mr. C. I. Wetmore, one of the bondsmen offered, was rejected. Monday afternoon Fred Clark was arrested and Mr. Wetmore was accepted upon his bail bond without hesitation. Why Mr. Wetmore should be a responsible bondsman in one case and a worthless one in the other is a mystery.

Our Adrian neighbors have now been favored with three analyses of their contemplated water supply.—Dr. Green's analysis cost only $70; Dr. Prescott's was considered more valuable and he was allowed $200 therefore; Dr. Knavin's will probably cost the city $31,000 together with interest and a reasonable attorney's fee before the bill is finally liquidated. Which analysis do they prefer? As Saul remarked to David when crossing the Rubicon, "You pays your money, and takes your choice."

It is now generally conceded that Mayor Navin has got away with $31,000 of the funds realized from the sale of the Adrian water bonds. Whether the city can be forced to pay these bonds is rather an interesting question to the tax-payers of that city. It is contended that the city is not liable. But, why not? The bonds were ordered by the Mayor and Recorder, the two principal executive officers of the city, hence they are genuine bonds. They are not forged paper by any means.—They are held by innocent buyers who have paid their money therefor. Cannot collection be enforced the same as it could be upon negotiable paper in the hands of an innocent purchaser before maturity? Should not the principal (in this case Adrian city) suffer for the rascality of its own agent, rather than an innocent purchaser of its bonds when the latter are undoubtedly genuine? Adrian city has a remedy against its agent, of course, but has the city any remedy against an innocent holder of genuine negotiable paper?

THE ADRIAN WATER WORKS.

Adrian has been enjoying a little experience during the past ten days, peculiarly her own. Upon the success of the "kid" movement in April, 1881, the city at once launched out upon a scheme of vast internal improvement. The Wabash railway, the rag shops and the Reform School were not enough. The city must needs have an extensive and expensive system of water works. No well regulated city can be in the fashion now-a-days without water works. In this great age people have no time to fool away pumping water from wells for washing and culinary purposes. Water is needed with which to wash store windows, to sprinkle the lawns and to form artificial puddles in time of drought for good little boys and girls to play in. And occasionally too, when freight trains get snowed in and the supply of whiskey runs dry, people need a little water to drink.

No one who knew anything about the subject, knew of any adequate water supply within ten miles of the city, but that was a slight objection; if no natural supply existed, one could be talked up. There were several localities where water could be found. The river Raisin during the spring and autumn seasons would afford quite a quantity of muddy water.—There was a spring on Col. Wood's farm but the objection to that was that it went dry every summer. Wolf creek flowed for several miles through the barn-yards of Cambridge Rome and Adrian, as the farmers of those towns could bear witness, but an analysis of Wolf Creek water showed that the mineral ingredients in solution were not of the proper hygenic character.—If it should be found that none of these sources was adequate, then the authorities could dig a big hole in the ground, let the surface water run into it and then pump from this reservoir into an elevated tank from which the city could be supplied. So far therefore as the mechanical part of the work was concerned of finding water, no trouble was apprehended.—But the financial part of the problem was more difficult to solve. The water works would cost $150,000; that is, it would require this sum from the tax payers to meet the expense of labor, materials, pickings, filchings, perquisites, and all the little et ceteras—especially the latter. Fortunately the city had provided herself with a Mayor who was equal to the occasion. The ways and means adopted by the versatile young man to compass this part of the business are related below.

In presenting the points of this wonderful story we will adopt the woman method, commence at the last end and go backwards. In working the case up the mayor seems to have proceeded a la Blaine, went in "on the sly," and had not meddlesome intruders interfered with his plans, the bonds would have been placed and the funds all secured before this date. The first intimation which the public had of the affair was contained in a dispatch sent on Wednesday, Feb. 8th to Capt. Miller from L. J. Hendee, President of the Etna Ins. Co., of Hartford, Conn., enquiring if the six per cent. water bonds were regularly issued. He replied that they had not been issued at all. Subsequently he telegraphed for information as to who was offering the bonds. This led to a telegraphic correspondence which elicited these facts.

1st—Mayor Navin had procured the engraving of 150 one thousand dollar bonds at the Franklin bank note co., of New York city.

2d—He had brought the bonds home, affixed his own signature to them as mayor, and by some means induced the recorder, Mr. Stanton, to sign them also in his official capacity. Mr. Stanton has since acknowledged that he signed seventy-five of them. The seal of the city was affixed to all of them.

3d—These bonds were made payable, principal and interest, at the office of the Union Trust Company, a responsible banking institution of New York, and the officers of the Trust Company became satisfied of their regularity and agreed to negotiate them.

4th—Two firms of brokers, Post, Martin & Co., and D. A. Easton, agreed to take the entire issue of $150,000 at $1.06, and at once set about selling them again at $1.09 and $1.10 upon speculation.

5th—In pursuance of this plan, Post, Martin & Co., went to Hartford and offered some of the bonds to the Etna Ins. Co.

6th—The President of that company as a matter of precaution telegraphed to their agent in Adrian, Capt. Miller, as above stated, which led to the exposure of the whole scheme. To carry out his plot successfully the mayor had sent to Mr. Easton a copy of the council resolutions, authorizing a special election to vote on bonding the city, and two forged certificates to their genuineness; one from W. A. Underwood, stating that he had drafted the bonds by the authority of the council, and the other from Judge Howell, stating that he had examined the bonds and found that all the requirements of the law had been complied with. This certificate had the seal of the circuit court attached.

On Thursday afternoon, the 9th inst, the mayor began to find the local atmosphere getting rather too sultry for him, and took French leave over the Wabash line.

Subsequent developments have cast suspicion upon other parties in the city, and warrants have been issued for Recorder Stanton, R. J. Jewell and Fred Clark, all of whom are under arrest. It is very doubtful however whether any of these parties have any guilty knowledge of the affair. For boldness of conception, and shrewdness of execution, the scheme has no parallel in the annals of Michigan rascality. And that which adds a heavy load to the enormity of the mayor's offense is the fact that he betrayed and duped his best friends. The men who elected him, and who have stood by him during his term of office, have been hoodwinked by his cunning, and maliciously inveigled into committing acts, innocent in themselves, but which may become troublesome by reason of their connection with his crime. Future developments may change the situation somewhat, but from all the facts thus far made public, it is evident that the mayor put up the whole job unaided, duped his friends in Adrian, forged the necessary certificates for evidence, lied his way through in New York, deceived the Union Trust Company, got the bonds sold and delivered, and had it not been for the providential exposure sprung upon him, he would, ere this, have secured the proceeds and got away with the entire swag. It is not positively known whether he obtained any money, but the general opinion seems to be that he has drawn $31,500. At least such was the belief in Adrian yesterday.

WASHINGTON NOTES.

APPORTIONMENT.

Representative Payne says he thinks a vote will be reached on the apportionment bill some time next week. He spoke hopefully of the prospects of the bill as it came from the committee. "By whatever process we adopt," said he, "there is bound to be an inequality in representation. No scheme under consideration avoids that, but under the method now in vogue, New York, Pennsylvania, and Illinois would simply be robbed of one member each. Under the scheme proposed they would be treated fairly." As members come to study the matter, they take more kindly to the "Seaton method." It is substantially fair and is in fact only a return to the basis adopted by early congresses. Many representatives do not share this sanguine view of the outlook.

GUITEAU.

The demon, according to Warden Crocker, has become as docile as a lamb; doesn't insist upon having his own way as he did during the trial, and does what he is ordered to do without a murmur. He has lost much of his accustomed bravado, and does not become so excited when in conversation. Gen. Crocker states that he does not believe any man under sentence of death ever more fully appreciated the awful situation than the condemned. He has become very much depressed in spirits and shows it. He behaves with perfect decorum, and there is not a sign of insanity in his conversation or actions. He is denied the privilege of seeing visitors now altogether, and this seems to worry him. Friday, however, John W., his brother, called at the jail to arrange about the prisoner's clothing. The latter had an interview with his brother, previous to his departure for Boston. The jail officials have taken every precaution against the occurrence of anything that may cheat the gallows or anticipate the course of the law. The brick wall erected outside the assassin's cell has not been removed but preventing the proper ventilation, as it did, the warden arranged to have the prisoner occupy the adjoining cell, the window of which is not walled up, during the day, retiring to his own cell at night. This is to prevent the recurrence of the Sergt. Mason affair, for there is sufficient light in the corridors of the jail at night to make anyone in front of a cell window a good target to one standing out in the darkness. General Crocker says that the conduct of the prisoner is and has been since the verdict of the jury, entirely different when only the jail officials, his brother, or Scoville have been with him, or when newspaper reporters have been present. No time, except in the presence of reporters or those whom he took to be newspaper men, has he assumed the air of confidence and bravado that he did before the verdict was rendered. When conversing with his brother alone, the warden or any of the attaches of the jail, he talks quietly and earnestly. He yet clings to the hope that something may be done in the court in banc, but Gen. Crocker thinks that he is fast losing that hope.

HEWITT'S BILL.

The Bill introduced in the House by Mr. Hewitt, of New York, to carry into effect the provision of the Constitution respecting the election of President and Vice-President, provides that the Electors shall meet and cast their votes upon the second Monday in January. Between the day of the choosing of Electors and the day on which they are to vote the title to the office of Elector of any person claiming to have been chosen shall be determined and certified to the Executive of the State by such State authorities, ministerial or judicial, or in such manner as the State may prescribe by laws in force on the day of choosing the Electors, and every such determination shall be conclusive on questions of fact or of State law in the counting by Congress. The bill then proceeds to make regulations for the meeting of the two Houses in joint convention, and provides that when any objection to any vote shall be submitted in writing and signed by at least one Senator and one member the two Houses shall separate and come to a decision thereon, which decision shall be announced to the joint convention, and no vote shall be rejected except by the affirmative votes of both houses. The joint meeting shall not be dissolved until the count of the Electoral votes shall be completed and the result declared. Notwithstanding the decision or declaration provided for the title to office of any person so declared to be elected as President or Vice-President and the title of any claimant thereto may be tried and determined by an action brought in the name of the States in the nature of quo warranto in any Circuit Court of the United States, with a right of appeal to the Supreme Court.

David Dudley Field appeared before the select committee of the House on the law respecting the election of President and Vice-President and gave the committee at some length his views. He fully approved the features of the bill introduced in the House by Mr. Hewitt, and advocated the submission to the United States Courts under quo warranto, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, of all questions affecting title to the offices of the President and Vice-President arising under the election for those offices. No action has yet been taken by the committee upon the pending bill.

FRANK BAIRD.

MR. EDITOR:

Permit me to say through your columns to the citizens of Tecumseh and vicinity that I hope they will hear Major Frank Baird on Friday evening at the opera house on "The City of Hell." He is not the renowned caricaturist, so do not confound these two men. The one is a "chalk talker," the other is a word painter. I admit that the topic is a little hormy-lea, but the lecture is intensely interesting. Mr. Baird is not an orator of the Gough or Bain order, his quiver is not full of as polished arrows. He is himself and is logical, rugged, nervous, full of facts and at times truly eloquent. I heard him last Sundsy in Detroit at Whitney's opera house, before a fine audience and I need only say he moved his audience to great enthusiasm. He presents a startling array of facts in connection with the liquor traffic of this nation. Go and hear him and you will all say as did the hundreds who heard him on Sunday, "He is a strong man and his arguments and scenes are irresistible."

STATEMENT UNDER OATH.

"I HAVE been afflicted for twenty years with an obstinate skin disease, called by some M. D.'s Psoriasis, and others Leprosy, commencing on my scalp, and in spite of all I could do, with the help of the most skillful doctors, it slowly but surely extended until a year ago this winter, it covered my entire person in form of dry scales. For the last three years I have been unable to do any labor and suffering intensely all the time. Every morning there could be nearly a dustpanful of scales taken from the sheet on my bed, some of them half as large as the envelope containing this letter. In the latter part of the winter my skin commenced cracking open. I tried everything, almost, that could be thought of, without any relief. The 12th of June I started West, in hopes I could reach the Hot Springs. I reached Detroit, and was so low I thought I should have to go to the hospital, but finally got as far as Lansing, Mich., where I had a sister living. One Dr.—— treated me about two weeks, but did me no good. All thought I had but a short time to live. I earnestly prayed to die. Cracked through the skin all over my back, across my ribs, arms, hands, limbs, feet badly swollen, toe nails came off, finger nails dead and hard as bone, hair dead, dry and lifeless as old straw. Oh, my God! how I did suffer!

"My sister, Mrs. E. H. Davis, had a small part of a box of Cuticura in the house. She wouldn't give up; said, 'We will try Cuticura.' Some was applied on one hand and arm. Eureka! there was relief; stopped the terrible burning sensation from the word go. They immediately got the Cuticura Resolvent (blood purifier,) Cuticura and Cuticura Soap (the great skin cure.) I commenced by taking one tablespoonful of Resolvent three times a day after meals; had a bath once a day, water about blood heat; used Cuticura Soap freely; applied Cuticura morning and evening. Result, returned to my home in just six weeks from the time I left, and my skin as smooth as this sheet of paper."

TO AND FRO IN LONDON.

John R. Clark will deliver his lecture, "To and Fro," on Tuesday evening, Feb. 21st, at the opera house, under the auspices of Tecumseh Lodge Knights of Honor. This will be a benefit lecture, and we hope to see the house crowded. Let everybody turn out and give our townsman a rousing reception. From a large number of press notices we select a few which show the reputation Mr. Clark has attained, and how his lecture, To and Fro in London, is received.

Nothing like it since Gough was here. Eight hundred people heard him. It is a series of brilliant transitions from beginning to end.—Bay City Tribune.

He seems a mixture of Gough, Sol. Smith Russell and himself.—Flint, Mich., Globe.

In the great metropolis of the oil regions, Bradford, Pa., August 31st, 1880, the Era says: It was a very instructive lecture, and those who failed to attend missed a treat. Mr. Clark is a rapid speaker; he never wearies his hearers, and at times rises to the grandest flights of eloquence.

Nothing has so thoroughly brought out the man, where pathos, humor, history, mimicry and eloquence are so finely blended, as his To and Fro in London. Every boy and girl in the land should hear it.—Prof. W. Carey Hill, Supt. of Public Schools, Battle Creek.

As an orator, he is profound in his convictions. Soul, body, mind and muscle are brought into requisition. His knowledge of human character developed by observations and study of man, as a Thespian in other days, enables him to give graphic pictures of humanity. His "Apostrophe to Man" was simply grand.—Ypsilanti Sentinel.

He will reach the goal yet. The people not only want him, once they hear him, but they need him. He has that subtle eloquence that makes people feel the power of truth. Thank God for such men as John R. Clark.—Hornellsville Herald.

His "To and Fro in London" was well received last evening. It is full of the ethics of humanity; his "Apostrophe to Labor" was worth the admission. His development from a shoe black on London streets to the eloquent man he is, is simply phenomenal.—Bradford Evening Star.

He is amusing, instructive, dramatic, humorous, eloquent, earnest, musical and thrilling; he is second only to Gough.—Emlenton Times, Pa.

Gough's living rival—in the above lecture he is humorous and eloquent, a remarkable combination of pathos and humor in the olio of oddities presented to the audience.—Jacksonian Clarion, Pa.

I have long looked for the man in the great work of reform on whom the mantle of Gough will fall. I have found him in the eloquent man, John R. Clark, who has addressed you tonight.—Rev. Mr. Chase, Hillsdale.

THOS. SCOTT, of Ridgeway, who had a stroke of palsy in July last, is about again. He was able to be in town last Saturday which was the second time he has been in Tecumseh since last July.

FRANK BAIRD will deliver the next lecture of the regular course to-morrow, Friday, evening, at the Opera House. He is said to be a fine orator, one of the best now on the platform, and he will undoubtedly be greeted with a large audience.

The Brownville folks are having so much fun at their social gatherings, that they are putting them in thick and fast. Last Monday evening they met at the residence of C. M. Burlingame and on Tuesday evening at the residence of Henry Smith.

INFORMATION wanted of Miss Maggie O'Leary, daughter of Maurice O'Leary; last heard from in Chicago when her mother, Mrs. Margaret (Coffey) O'Leary died. Any information concerning her will be thankfully received by her sister, Mrs. W. Hollister, Oshkosh, Wis.

"FOR two years passenger trains have lost money on this road; and, if the people along the line do not patronize it well enough to pay expenses at least, there is no good reason why the owners should run it at their own expense," remarked a conductor on the Lake Shore until recently known as the Hillsdale road.

SOME people maintain that one vaccination will last a lifetime. That depends on what you are vaccinated for. The depositors of the Peoples' bank of Tecumseh are satisfied that one vaccination will do them for a lifetime.—Adrian Record. How about Adrian's little bond vaccination? D'ye think it "took" well?—Detroit Eve. News.

THE directors of the agricultural society of Lenawee county met at Workingmen's hall Monday afternoon, and after the transaction of some other business pertaining to the society, elected the following executive committee: J. R. Bennett, chairman; Jay Hoag, Adrian; G. D. Moore, Hudson; James Cook, Raisin; M. T. Cole, Palmyra.

ATTENTION of the common council is called to the fact that boys are injuring the maple trees along the streets of our village with gimlets. This is a crime punishable by imprisonment or fine, or both. The names of a number of guilty boys are known and if the offense is repeated prompt action will be taken by the village authorities.

THE wife of a well-known citizen of Monroe was lately followed to the cemetery by one of the largest and most expensive funerals ever seen in that city. A short time since in removing the remains from the vault to the grave, the widower and children stripped the casket of all its polished ornaments even to the screws fastening the lid.

OUR town treasurer, David Jones, was informed sometime ago by one of our best and most enterprising citizens, that should there be the names of any poor and needy people on the tax roll who could not pay their taxes to let him know of the fact. In the final settlement of the taxes, two such persons were found and their taxes promptly paid by this citizen. If our town contained more such men who were both able and willing to help their poorer neighbors, we would have a livlier town. This came to our knowledge by accident and hence we do not feel at liberty to mention names.

THE Tecumseh schools will observe Longfellow's day, Feb. 24. next week Friday; exercises in the afternoon.

NEXT Sunday evening the pastor of the Universalist church will discourse on "the Gods of ancient Greece," and the effect of Greek religion and arts on Christian theology.

S. W. TEMPLE has lately enlarged his planning mill by a wing two stories high on the north side, 16x58, which now makes his whole mill a building 74x85 ft. in all. A very complete establishment.

THE Brownville Social Club, to the number of 50 spent last Friday evening at the residence of W. Brazee.—To say that a good time was had would not half express the feelings of those present.

ONE Bennett, a man who has been working for a Detroit Mutual Insurance company for some time past in this vicinity, took a little too much "pain killer" the other evening, and warped his cane over his successor's head, much to the detriment of both head and cane.

WE have received from the publishers, F. B. Dickerson & Co., of Detroit a copy of James E. Scripps' book of travels, entitled Five Months Abroad. We read with much pleasure many of these letters during their publication in the Evening News, and now we have the entire series in a more permanent form. The book is neatly printed and bound and reflects credit upon the publishers.

MONDAY was rather a lively day for Maumee st. As Hayden's men were loading barrels on the wagon, part of the rack gave way, frightening the horses to such an extent that they whirled about and started into a run, scattering barrels promiscuously. Running south a few rods they turned into Wm. Ide's yard and stopped after running the wagon tongue completely through the side of the house, causing numerous articles of household furniture to dance about in good shape. No further damage was done. About an hour later, as Billy Smallidge was driving down the same street his team became frightened, and quickly detached themselves from the buggy, creating further excitement besides slight breakage about the buggy.

WHERE IS MAYOR NAVIN?

Thomas J. Navin, address, No. 14, Poker avenue, City of Fools, The Moon.

That's where he is gentlemen, and if you ever expect to find him you must go there to look for him. When a young man of Mr. Navin's capacity and proclivities is once over indulged with the fat of official position his egotistical corpulency, which is a natural consequence, becomes too great for a dweller upon this little earth and he hies away to higher realms and those more suited to his spontaneous growth.

Just think, gentlemen, what were Mr. Navin's capabilities. He once did most fouly assault this little burg, with a following of nine hard hitters and many others, bearers of his treasury, and the great onslaught had its results. He carried away with him in triumph the hard earned shekels of many of our private citizens, and the treasury of the town was sadly depleted, and the influence would have been felt unto this day if it had not been for the superior generalship of one Cadi Davison and Gen. C. Tom Cum, who in the early dawn of one bright morning made sail for the city of Detroit and procured the services of three renowned warriors. After returning, these two preservers of our peace and happiness invited another onslaught by the famous Thomas J., and it came even more severe and desperate than before. But what was the result this time? The nine hard-hitters, under the generalship of Mr. Navin, went home sadly demoralized, and their treasury became bankrupt, and the citizens of our little village made merry with Mr. Navin's shekels, out of which they had replenished themselves two fold. And all brought about by the aid of the three famous warriors of the city of Detroit. But what is more sad to contemplate is the fact that we were in part to blame for Mr. Navin's present obscurity. We robbed his treasury. We took to ourselves his houses and lands, his horses and bull dogs, and all that was his except Mrs. Gray, of Detroit. We should do penance for that in order that we may pluck the thorns from our flesh. Among the first who shall proceed so to do is

Yours Truly,
SAMUEL SLY.

OUR CLINTON NEIGHBORS.

Having visited Clinton several times during the past fortnight we will lump them all into one visit and grind out a little copy on our observations. It is unnecessary to state the nature of our business, as people can draw their own inference on that point.

The hotel will furnish a good starting point. Field is doing finely in his new location, and seems to be giving Clinton a first class hotel.—He is now making extensive repairs which will improve the interior very much. Yet is a model landlord.

A call at the News office found Bro. Field hard at work. He is a convert to the advance pay plan on subscriptions, and intends to adhere to that rule hereafter.

We next took in Dave Woodward's foundry, not literally, but in a metaphorical sense. He is preparing for a big plow trade the coming season, as his new pattern plows are a grand success. We believe Woodward has a bonanza in his new plow if the business is vigorously pushed.

Frank McClure is making harness by the dozen and is well pleased with the business outlook.

E. F. Muir is to be found at the old stand, where he held forth for so many years before he sold out to Rowland & Lewis. He has lately bought the business back again and is selling the best cuts of fresh meat to be found in his section, just as he used to do.

Pat Murphy is as happy as a clam at high tide and has wood enough ahead to last him two years.

Marsteller is doing well in his marble shop. His trade is good, both at home and at his branch office in Tecumseh.

Clark's bank is running smoothly under the care of C. C. Dell. No indications of an assignment yet. Mr. Clark does not belong to the assigning kind.

Dr. J. L. Tuttle is to be found at his old quarters. He is now one of the medical fixtures of Clinton, and enjoys an extensive and lucrative practice.

W. V. Fisk is preparing to rent his house for the season, and intends to go west early in the spring to spend the coming summer.

Uncle Hiram Reynolds is enjoying very good health this winter, whereat his many friends rejoice. We hope he may stay with us many years longer.

Geo. B. Williams paints buggies and enjoys life in a cosy home of his own. He claims to have the best cow in the county of Lenawee.

Alden Rundell is playing a lone hand in the livery business and he knows how to play it too.

Postmaster Rose still stands behind the boxes and is just as accommodating as he was twenty years ago.

John J. White is still on the bench, that is the tailor's bench. His health has been poorly lately and he is going to Ann Arbor soon to take a course of treatment there.

Dan Gibson is enthusiastic over his fruit farm. We took a ride over his premises and were surprised to see the large amount of trees and small fruits he has on the place, comprising twenty acres in apple and peach trees, strawberries, raspberries, &c.—He is making arrangements to put in 400 rods of tile drain and wants a good ditcher at once.

E. G. Cook is still buying grain and produce, live stock and wool. He belongs to the class of men who cannot be idle.

J. S. Kies is on the road most of the time selling goods for the factory, while the latter is kept running to its utmost capacity to supply orders. Business has never been more prosperous with the factory than during the past season.

John Smith & Son are rushing business as usual. They are now, as for many years, taking the lead among the business houses of Clinton. As long as they sell dry goods they will have a large trade.

D. H. Silvers and John Ed. are clothing the people yet. Dave, however is just at present giving his attention to his branch store at Milan. Business seems to be better there than in Clinton. He is also running a good store in Manchester.

S. C. Babcock gives a clean shave and close hair-cut at the pleasant rooms just east of Brown's hardware store. He has been sick for two weeks past but is now handling the razor again.

A little babe was recently left on the door step of an Ann Arbor citizen by its heartless parent. The Argus speaks of it as follows: A good many people are inquiring about the abandoned baby left on the doorstep of a residence near the University, and cared for by a washerwoman. The promise of money, $4 per week, to be regularly sent for its keeping has not been faithfully kept. The woman in whose care it is, knows its parents, its father alleged to be in high standing, and will, unless the amount be weekly paid, make an expose that will not sound very well.

THE Lake Shore ticket office at Napoleon was broken into last Monday night and a quantity of tickets stolen.

THE ladies of Tecumseh, having listened with great pleasure to a course of lectures by Mrs. E. B. Lyman, on practical physiology and hygene, wish through the columns of your paper, to express to others their pleasure and the benefit to be derived from attending them. Mrs. Lyman is a noble woman, laboring for the good of those she addresses; is thoroughly prepared by cultivation, experience and talents for the work, and is one of the best lecturers on the subject. The lectures were well attended by the best ladies here, and they speak for her, where ever she goes, a like cordial patronage. And we hope at an early day she will visit us again, when she will be sure of a still larger concourse.

The N. R. & A. A. Association.

Enquiries have been made whether the Peoples' bank failure has effected the stability of the National Relief and Accident Association. We can assure people from our own knowledge that it will not hurt the company a particle. Col. Fitzsimmons went away before the company began business and none of the funds were in his hands. The officers of the company are well pleased with the prospects of the company. New members are received every day, and several agents are already at work in some of the best towns in the state. The peculiar features of their policies are very popular with insurers and their care in taking sound lives is giving people confidence in their honesty and stability. We shall have more to say of this association hereafter.

The Latest Knavin Items.

The developments of yesterday in the Navin matter are briefly these:

Prosecuting Attorney Watts is in New York. He has examined the bonds and is satisfied that Stanton signed all of them.

An active search is going on for Navin and the latest dispatches make it almost certain that he has crossed the Rio Grande and is now in old Mexico.

It appears now that Navin did not receive a dollar of the money. Only two checks were drawn by him. No. 1 was given to the Franklin Co. to pay their bill for engraving the bonds. No. 2 was the check for $48,000 drawn in favor of Jewell. It was supposed until yesterday that the Jewell check was the balance of $79,500, which the Union Trust Co. intimated had been called, and hence that Navin had absolutely received $31,500. But it is now certain that check No. 1 was given to the Franklin Co. Tuesday's Post & Tribune contains a long interview with Willis Merritt, in which he details at length the manner in which he became acquainted with Navin and his business relations with him. We would publish the interview but its length prevents.

COMMON COUNCIL PROCEEDINGS.

VILLAGE OF TECUMSEH, MICH.,
Council Room, Feb. 6, 1882.

Present Messrs. Heesen, Mills, Root, Smith, and the Recorder.

Minutes of last meeting read and approved.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

On Finance:

Report in writing in regard to the Marshall's report referred to this committee at last meeting of council.

On motion the report is accepted and the committee instructed that as there is, according to the committee's report, a discrepancy between the commission retained by the Marshall for the collection of taxes, and that allowed by ordinance of Council or authorized by his warrant, they are to settle with him on the basis of paying 3 per cent commission for the collection of taxes as established by ordinance and contained in his warrant.

The same committee report in favor of allowing the following bills which have been presented since last meeting, to wit:

Brewer Bros., oil and lamp supplies	$11 01
Gutta Percha & Rubber Mf'g. Co., expander and coupling rings	13 00
P. S McKinnon, services as per bill	35 42
W. C. Jordan, services as St. Com., 6½ days	13 00

Uric acid in the blood is the cause of all rheumatism. This acid is the cause of inflamation, which is the source of great pain. It is through the function of the kidneys that the acid accumulates in the blood. Kellogg's Columbian Oil acts directly on the kidneys, and thereby removes the cause of all rheumatism, and effects a permanent cure.

The Business Man's Best Friend.

Mr. C. L. Oudesluys, a leading importer of Baltimore, has stated that nothing has done his dyspepsia, indigestion, &c., so much good as that most wonderful of all tonic and reviving medicines—Brown's Iron Bitters. Just think of it; at a supper the other night although a chronic dyspeptic, he says he ate at 12 o'clock, fried oysters, chicken salad and ice cream, after which taking a dose of Iron Bitters, he never spent a more pleasant night, with no dyspeptic symptoms in the morning.

DIED.

TALLMAN—On the 1st day of February, Mattie L., the infant son of Mr. & Mrs. Dewitt Talman aged 10 mo. and 28 days, after protracted suffering from whooping cough and consequent complications sweetly fell asleep in Jesus.

The funeral service was numerously attended by neighbors, friends and kindred of the family. The pastor was assisted by the Rev. S. K. Spahr of Adrian, whose remarks were peculiarly appropriate to the occasion. May the light of knowledge of the christian religion comfort and sustain the bereaved parents, and may a child in heaven be an added incentive to press forward until they meet their beautiful babe in the land of life. And yet:

"Such a little flower in the sod,
So tiny in its grave;
O how can I render so soon to God,
The beautiful gift he gave."

Nay, rather, He who sees the end from the beginning chooses unerringly for us and directs, overrules all for the best. "Even so Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight." W. G.

Aged Parents.

By some, aged parents are considered a burden, of which they would gladly rid themselves. We often see these persons treat their parents unkindly, apparently forgetting the debt of love and gratitude which they owe to their father and mother. Ah, how ungrateful is the human heart! How apt it is to become cold and hardened towards those whom it once loved with the tenderest, holiest affection! O heartless children! Was it not your mother who watched over you in the hours of infancy? Was it not she who spent so many sleepless nights by your side as you lay in your little cot, suffering from disease which she feared might take the loved one from her sight? And, when the danger was past, knelt and uttered a prayer of thanksgiving to God for His great kindness in sparing the life of her darling? She has cared for you all through bygone years, and she prays for you still. It was she who taught you to say your simple prayer each evening as you kneel beside her knee. Oh, how you loved her then! Every childish care and sorrow was poured into her sympathizing ear, and you ever found in her a sympathizing friend and counsellor.

And your father? Do you not remember when you used to stand at the window and watch him coming from the heat where he had labored hard all day long, that you might not want? And, when the evening meal was over, then he took you on his knee, told you pretty stories, and called you his precious child? And that, when you came to be of the proper age, he sent you to school that you might obtain an education and prepare yourself to become wise and useful, and be an honor to yourself and to the world? Have you forgotten all this? It cannot be.

Stop and think what you do when you pronounce your father and mother burdens. Consider that the vigor of life is gone, that they have become weak and dependent, and that their poor old hearts need cheering by kind words and pleasant smiles. The shadows of their lives are lengthening—their sun is about to set. Then be careful that you cause no cloud to settle and obscure the glory of that sunset.

Your father's growing old,
His strength is very feeble;
He leans on his faithful staff
For he's weak in every limb.
His years are beyond fourscore told,
His earthly hopes are fled;
He sees with slackened hold
His long-loved staff of dread.

Your mother's old and feeble,
Her locks are thin and gray;
Her aged form is bent
Low down with pain and care;
Her soon will pass away.
The one who loves you dearly
Your own shall soon follow
Down to cross the river
And stand on the other shore.

Now while the Father lends
They are dear pledges for you;
Then be heaped the wrongs of life
With sorrow, sighing and tears.
And now, when age has come
And earthly hopes have fled
Oh, make up to them your home
And cheer their drying feet.

Tree-Planting in Autumn.

Having planted many thousands of fruit trees, including peach, pear, apple, plum, quince and cherry, and that in different States, North and South, we are unhesitatingly of the opinion that a much less percentage of trees die when planted in the fall than when planted in the spring. The reasons are obvious on reflection. The ground is usually put in better order. The soil becomes settled around the trees, while the soluble portion of the soil settle down around the roots, ready to be assimilated on the first motion of the sap in the early spring. The trees get the benefit of the first effort at growth, and advance their rootlets so far that there is little danger of the hot weather of summer, when trees planted in the spring, having made but comparatively little growth, usually for the trying effect of July and August ships. There is no necessity for the expensive work of staking and tying, some trees taken off by wagons without protection, capitalists. We have never staked a tree set in autumn—never lost a tree. If, however, trees are secured too late for fall planting they should be heeled in and planted as early in the spring as the spring season. Ohio Farmer.

Origin of "Buffalo Bill."

William F. Cody thus explains how he came to be called Buffalo Bill: "In 1867, when the Kansas Pacific road was being built, I was in the service of the government. One of the managers of the road came to me and said the men were out of meat, and asked me what I would contract to furnish twenty-five buffaloes a day for. I told him I was in the service of the government and could not work for him at any price. The company, however, made an arrangement with the government so I got off, and he hired me at $500 a month to shoot buffaloes. I thought that a month was the biggest salary a man ever received. I went to work, and in eighteen months killed 1,250 buffaloes. The fellows employed on the road, as a consequence, got very tired of buffalo meat. When they saw me bringing they knew by appearance I heralded a fresh supply of tough buffalo meat, and they sent word to another, 'Bedad here comes Buffalo Bill again; sharpen up your grinders, we'll have more buffalo to-day.' I soon became known along the entire line of the Kansas Pacific as 'Buffalo Bill.'"

Home Attractions.

When love and affection are banished from home, life loses its greatest charm. Some homes are full of love and sunshine for strangers, and all sadness and gloom for the ones for whom they live. To constitute a truly happy home, there should be pretty little personal adornments on the part of the wife, who thereby shows a desire to please her husband and add to the general attractions of home. A pleasant word on her part, when the care-worked man comes home, often eases and raw edge of some trouble on his mind, and draws out a corresponding desire to be both agreeable and respectful, which characteristics are always recompensed by affection, while roughness and impatience are soon followed by insolence, and when sweet temper gives way to anger and discord the home circle is no longer attractive. A disrespectful manner on the side of the husband or wife leads to disastrous consequences.

The subject of conversation at an evening entertainment was the intelligence of animals, particularly dogs. Says Smith: "There are dogs that have more sense than their masters." "Just so," responded young Fitznoodle. "I've got that kind of a dog myself."

A Good Brine.

A very excellent pickle for meat of all kinds may be prepared by the use of the following ingredients: Two gallons of water, three pounds of salt, one pound of sugar, one pound of saltpetre, and one ounce of potash. In this ratio the pickle may be increased to any amount desired. If all the above substances are pure there is no necessity for boiling them. As they are liable to contain impurities, however, it is better to boil them and skim off the substances that rises to the surface of the liquid. After the boiling and skimming the pickle should remain in some vessel till it becomes cold and all the heavy impurities settle to the bottom. Meat to be preserved in pickle should be packed close in the barrel or cask, and should be kept in place by a perforated board or plate placed upon it, and weighed down by a flat stone or other weight. The pickle should be in sufficient quantity to cover the meat. If at any time small bits of meat rise to the surface, they should be removed, as they are liable to become rancid by contact with the air, and convey a bad taste to the brine and the meat contained in it. If the pickle becomes bloody at the end of eight or ten days, it should be poured off and reboiled. After it becomes clear by boiling and skimming it should be allowed to cool, when it may again be poured over the meat.

Making it Secure.

A few days ago a citizen having an office on Monroe avenue made arrangements with an old colored man to sweep out the rooms twice per week for the weekly salary of ---. The first week's salary was paid and received, and everything was all right, but when the next payment came due the old man hesitated, hung around for a while and then said:

"Cap'n, ---, am I sweepin' out to please yer?"

"Oh yes."

"Doan' find no fault with me?"

"None at all. You are doing well enough."

"Ize glad to hear dat. What I wanted to ax ye was whether dis was a uphemeral job. Ize got to be on de ground. If its a steady job, Ize gwine down an make the first payment on a $5 looking-glass for de ole woman. I want to be sort o' secure afore I launch out."

One of the Duties of a Teacher.

The teacher who, each day, hears his classes recite in exactly the same manner that he did the day before, falls far short of his duty. He should not only prepare upon the subject he is teaching, but he should strive to present these subjects by as many new and interesting methods as possible. How few teachers there are who can give any other reason for teaching as they do, than that thus they themselves were taught. The special training of teachers will assist them, but it will still be necessary to be constantly on the alert for some means by which they may improve their method of teaching. In fact, those teachers are best qualified who are thoroughly imbued with the idea that they must and will find some way to make the subjects interesting to their pupils. Teachers should realize that there is something interesting and exciting in every branch of study, and if the pupil dislikes a certain branch, it is not the fault of the branch, but of the teacher.

THE GAIT.—One may judge of the spirits and disposition of a man by his ordinary gait and mein in walking. He who habitually pursues abstract thought looks down on the ground. He who is accustomed to sudden impulses, or is trying to seize upon some necessary recollection, goes up with a kind of jerk. He who is a steady, cautious, merely practical man walks on deliberately, his eyes straight before him, and even in his most musing moods observes things around sufficiently to avoid a porter's knot or a butcher's tray. But the man with strong ganglions—of pushing, lively temperament, who, though practical, is yet speculative—the man who is emulous and active, and ever trying to rise in life—sanguine, alert, bold—walks with a spring, looks rather above the heads of his fellow creatures, but with a quick, easy turn of his own, which is tightly set on his shoulders; his mouth is a little open; his eye is bright, rather fearless, inquisitive; his port has something of defiance; his form is erect, but without stiffness.

A curious circumstance is said to have occurred in a silk factory of M. Garibaldi at Crenigna. It is positively stated that in that factory a quantity of silk-worms, instead of forming a cocoon as usual, actually wove a kind of silk ribbon of the breadth of ten inches and the length of upwards of twelve feet. In the course of the inquiries made on the matter, it has been elicited that a similar phenomenon, only on a much larger scale, took place at Alexandria, in 1853, in the silk factory of Dr. Gilo, where the silk worms wove a ribbon two inches broad and upwards of sixty feet in length, part of which is now preserved in the Museum of Natural History at Turin.

All over the world human hearts are the same. We have only to lift the veil which divides our inner life from the cold, outward, everyday life, to find the same anxious longing, the same earnest grappling with the great problem of human life.

What will please you most will be the pleasure of enjoying your meals, while passing over the beautiful prairies of Illinois and Iowa, in one of our magnificent Dining Cars that accompany all Through Express Trains. You get an entire meal, as good as is served in any first-class hotel, for seventy-five cents.

Appreciating the fact that a majority of the people prefer separate apartments for different purposes, and the immense passenger business of this line warranting it, we are pleased to announce that the Company runs Pullman Palace Sleeping Cars for sleeping purposes, and Palace Dining Cars for eating purposes only. One other great feature of our Palace Cars is a SMOKING SALOON where you can enjoy your "Havana" at all hours of the day.

Magnificent Iron Bridges span the Mississippi and Missouri rivers at all points crossed by this line, and transfers are avoided at Council Bluffs, Kansas City, Leavenworth and Atchison, connections being made in Union Depots.

The Game of Scandal.

There is a game called "Scandal," which creates a great deal of amusement when it is played properly. The persons who are engaged in the game stand or sit in a circle. The more the better; thirty or forty will make more fun than ten or twelve. When all are ready, the person appointed takes his right-hand neighbor aside and whispers in his ear a short story; it may be about some one present, or about some public personage; but whatever it is, he must write it down and keep it, as a proof of what his statement was. The neighbor, in his turn, repeats the story as exactly as possible to the person on his right hand, and he, having listened, passes it on. At last the tale returns to its original narrator, who writes it down as he received it. It is said, and I believe truly, that never once has it come back as it started. The most astonishing alterations occur. Innocent jokes have turned to frightful accusations, and only the reading of the first story can convince any one that he did not repeat exactly what he heard. There is no better type than this amusing play of the time-worn game of scandal that the world is playing, and has been playing ever since it began. That a number of innocent people, with no intention of distorting facts, cannot hand the simplest story from one to another in the same room for a few moments without ridiculous alterations, proves the impossibility of getting at the truth of any story which has passed through many lips. The disposition of the hearer colors the tale even as he listens, and more than this, many persons are deaf without being conscious of it, and in a peculiar way. There is an auricular illusion as well as an optical illusion. I know persons who, while intently listening, hear words that are not uttered, and who, in repeating the impression that has been made on them, do not intend to tell falsehoods, but who will, nevertheless, say to you, with a bland smile:

"I have told every one that you told me that Mr. X.'s beautiful young wife had eloped, and they are so sorry for him." And while you deny that you made any such statement, and stare in wonder at the speaker, you remember having told her that "Mr. X.'s new country house was situated on a beautiful slope of the hill, and that he had bought it to please his young wife." I, myself, no longer believe anything I hear, and only half that I see.

When you hear an evil story of any one you know to be good, discredit it, and say so. Grapes are not gathered from thistles. Neither do thistles grow upon a grape-vine. The fruit tells you from what tree it came; but you know also what fruit a tree is likely to bear. One you know to be good and sweet and kind and noble, is not likely to have done bad or cruel or spiteful or petty things. Why should you believe a tale of him who is the subject of scandal?

The Jim River.

THE LONGEST STREAM IN THE WORLD NOT NAVIGABLE.

The Dakota river, vulgarly known as "Jim" river, is a stream worthy of more than a passing notice. Geographical writers have hitherto paid little attention to this great water course with its common-place nickname—mostly, we presume, because they have never had their attention directed to the fact that it is the longest river in the world not capable of being navigable in any of its parts. Having directed attention to this striking feature of its physical make up, an explanation of how it acquired its homely pseudonym may prove of interest. The early French traders and missionaries who came this way gave it its original appellation, and among them it was known as River Aux Jacques. This was afterwards anglicized into plain James river, and speedily vulgarized into the more pungent title of Jim river. Congress in 1861 took the subject in hand, having, perhaps, a vague idea of the part which this extensive stream is to take in the future of the new West, and decreed that "it shall hereafter be called the Dakota river." But congressional enactments are not always strictly obeyed, and in this case there seems to be no disposition to accord to the Dakota its legal cognomen. It is known as the Jim, it is spoken of as the Jim, and printed the Jim oftener than any other way. But there is not much of any thing in a name. The river is there, and it will doubtless flow on forever, whether it is known as the Dakota, the James, or plain Jim. We have stated that it is the longest river in the world which cannot be navigated in any portion by steam vessels. This we believe to be a fact. It rises near latitude 48, and traverses 525 miles of country. It is an exceedingly crooked steam, constantly doubling itself and crossing and winding along it prairie bed. Although we have no official measurement of its crooks and curves, its actual length cannot be less than 1000 miles. Throughout a large portion of its length it maintains a nearly uniform depth and breadth, and moves with a sluggish current. These are a few characteristics of the Dakota river, which waters a country of incomparable native richness.

The Victoria Regia.

Travelers on the rivers and lakes in tropical climes describes the Victoria regia as one of the most remarkable of vegetable productions. Springing from the depths of some river or lake, it pushes up to the sunlight a strong and solid framework of nerves and fibers, strengthened by very projecting partitions such as no other plant possesses, jagged and irregular beneath the water, but opening out upon the surface smooth leaves nearly circular in form, from six to eight feet in diameter, which float there thus securely anchored, like miniature islands of green. So firmly are these leaves supported by the framework beneath that a person of ordinary weight can stand upon them without sinking; and the birds of the regions where they grow often fly to them as a resting-place at night to avoid beasts of prey, and sometimes resort to them for the purpose of hatching and rearing their young. The flowering of the San Francisco specimen is thus described: "The streets were thronged with carriages, and the cars thronged with people going to gaze upon the great lily in bloom. The tank is twenty feet in diameter, and about four feet deep. The flower is about fourteen inches in diameter, of a bright crimson, shading off at the centre to a light creamy pink. The stamens are like gold tipped with crimson. The leaves are of immense size and strength, six feet in diameter, with ribs as large as a cane. A lady weighing 85 pounds stood on the unsupported leaf. It was amusing to hear the expressions of admiration and amazement of the hundreds of people who came to see this wonderful flower."

By the following experiment Prof. Tyndall proves that contagious diseases are propagated not by sewer gas or effluvia, but by solid particles discharged into the atmosphere by currents of air or gas: A piece of steak is cut up and steeped in water. It is then heated a little above the temperature of the blood, and the liquid strained off. In a short time this fluid becomes turbid, and when examined through a microscope is found to be swarming with living organisms. These animalculae are destroyed by the application of heat, and on filtering a perfectly pure liquid is obtained, which will remain pure for an unlimited period if kept free from dust; but if a fly dips its leg into fluid containing living organisms and into the pure liquid, the whole would be swarming with the microscopic creatures within forty-eight hours.

The name Jenner means a drawn lancet, putting to flight a loathsome disease, and the name Harvey signifies the circulation of the blood. And the time is coming when the name of Dr. David Kennedy will be indissolubly connected in the public mind with the purification of the blood, a deed only less important than the discovery of its motion through the human body. This Dr. Kennedy accomplishes by means of his new medicine, called "Favorite Remedy."

Children hanker after new things and new ideas. They will learn with pleasure from the lips of parents what they think drudgery to learn from books, and even if they have the misfortune to be deprived of many educational advantages, they will grow up intelligent if they enjoy in childhood the privilege of listening to the conversation of intelligent people. Let them have many opportunities of learning in this way. Be kind to them, and don't think it beneath you to answer their little questions, for they proceed from an implanted faculty which every true man and woman should take delight in gratifying.

A BRAVE LADY.

(From the Courier.)

Mrs. Schoonmaker, of Creek Locks, Ulster Co., N. Y., had the misfortune to entirely lose the sight of one of her eyes, through an accident, and endured painful inflamatory action therein for two long years; the other eye finally becoming sympathetically affected, her general health seriously suffering; indeed she was a mere wreck, a walking skeleton. In this terrible she consulted Dr. David Kennedy, of Roundout, N. Y., who told her at once that the injured eye must be removed. She quietly but firmly said: "All right Doctor, but don't give me chloroform. Let my husband sit by my side during the operation, and I will neither cry out or stir." The work was done, and the poor woman kep her word. Talk of soldierly courage! This showed greater pluck than it takes to face a hundred guns. To restore her general health and give tone and strength to the system, Dr. Kennedy then gave the "Favorite Remedy," which cleansed the blood and imparted new life to the long suffering woman. She rapidly gained health and stre[illegible] with "Favorite Remedy" [illegible] priceless blessing to women. No family should be with it. Your druggist has it. If not send to Dr. David Kennedy, Roundout, New York.

Clark all those tracts or parcels of land situate in the township of Hudson in the county of Lenawee and state of Michigan, bounded and described as follows, to wit: Being village lot number five (5) on Laird's addition to the village of Hudson, being situated on section nineteen in said township of Hudson. Also one other piece or parcel of land situate in the village of Hudson, county of Lenawee, and state of Michigan, described as follows: situated on section nineteen in said township, commencing on the north line of land deeded by Ann B. Cobb to Robert Laird, and sixteen rods westerly the west division of fractions on said section nineteen and running thence southerly and parallel with the line of fractions till it strikes the southern angle line of land deeded by Harvey Cobb to David Pratt, and running thence westerly on said Pratt's line till it intersects the east line of land now owned by John W. Pierce, thence southerly till it reaches the southeast corner of said Pierce's lot; thence westerly on the south line of said Pierce's lot to a point four rods west of the line first above described and mentioned, as a part of the boundary; thence northerly on a line parallel with the first described line to the north line of Robert Laird's land at a point four rods west of the place of beginning; thence easterly on said Laird's north line to the place of beginning, to secure the payment of one hundred and twenty-two dollars and the interest to accrue thereon. Said mortgage was on the 23d day of April, 1856, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for Lenawee county, in Liber "L" of mortgages on folios 276, 277 and 278. Osborn, which assignment was on the 25th day of October, 1867, duly recorded in said Register's office in Liber 50 of mortgages, on pages 768 and 769. Default has been made in the conditions of said mortgage by the non-payment of the moneys due thereon by which the power of sale therein contained has become operative. CONGRESSIONAL.

SENATE.

FEB. 7.—The bill in relation to the Japanese indemnity fund was reported favorably.

On motion of Mr. Harrison, the senate bill for the delivery of 100 pieces of condemned bronze cannon to the Society of the Army of the Cumberland for a Garfield statue in Washington was considered. The committee's amendment, substituting a provision for the proposition the secretary of war to the society of $7,000 out of proceeds of condemned cannon, was agreed to, and the bill, as amended, passed.

Mr. Coke was awarded the floor for a speech upon the tariff, the Morrill compensation bill being taken up to allow him to speak. He favored a tariff revision by a committee of the two houses.

Senator Coke spoke for three hours, declaring that protection meant monopoly and whole-sale robbery of the people, and urging that the best interests of the country demanded the adoption of a tariff for revenue only, and at 4.35 p. m. the senate adjourned.

FEB. 8.—In the senate Mr. Blair introduced a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the constitution, prohibiting the manufacture, sale, importation and exportation of alcoholic liquors and other poisonous beverages from and after 1900.

Mr. Call offered resolutions, which were laid over to enable him to speak upon them hereafter, directing the secretary of state to institute negotiations for a reciprocity treaty with the states of Central and South America.

Messrs. Vest, Maxey and Davis (W. Va.) all supported the arrears of pension bill. The latter offered an amendment to protect the government against fraudulent pensions, and to protect honest pensioners. The matter then went over until to-morrow, on the understanding that there would then be a vote.

Among the private bills called up by unanimous consent and passed was one by Mr. Dawes, to accept and ratify the agreement with the Crow Indians of Montana. It provides for surveys, and settlement upon a portion of the reservation in severalty of the Indians now on the reservation. In consideration for the cession of the remainder of the reservation, the government agrees to pay twenty-five annual instalments of $30,000 each. An appropriation is made for the first instalment and $18,000 for the survey. At 4 o'clock the senate went into executive session, and adjourned at 4.45 p. m.

FEB. 9.—In the senate several bills, placing officers who had retired to civil life on the retired list of the army, came up under the regular call of the calendar. Senators Plumb and Sherman protested against such action as being unjust to regular army officers, and as establishing a dangerous precedent.

The bill for the sale of portions of Fort Leavenworth military reservation was reported favorably.

The bill promoting the efficiency of the life-saving service, with an amendment creating an additional station, was reported.

Bills introduced: By Mr. Saunders, for a bridge across the Missouri at or near Omaha. By Mr. Grover, providing for the organization of the district of southeastern Alaska and civil government therefor.

Mr. Plumb then addressed the senate in support of Ingall's resolution against the repeal of the arrears of pension act.

Mr. Harrison also spoke in favor of the principle of the pension act, claiming that it appealed to the judgment and sense of justice of every man. In order to avoid the frauds claimed to exist, he approved the recommendation of the commissioner of pensions, that 400 special agents be appointed to investigate claims.

Mr. Brown claimed that it would be unjust to repeal or suspend the operations of the act.

Mr. Peck pointed out that several senators were veterans of the Mexican war, and it was not right that they should come in for pensions under one of the amendments proposed.

Mr. Maxey said that needy soldiers of the war ought not to be deprived of justice because some few of the survivors happened to be rich.

At 5 o'clock eulogies to the memory of the late Representatives Orth and Conner were pronounced by Butler, Bayard, Jones, Fla., and Hampton. Senator Bayard, in the course of his eulogistic remarks on the character and career of the late representative of South Carolina, paid a glowing tribute to the influence of the Irish race in America. Adjourned at 5.40 p. m.

FEB. 10.—In the senate the report of the commission on pleuro-pneumonia was called for. On Tuesday next the judiciary committee will ask to have the bill regarding polygamy in Utah considered. Mr. Morrill said after the pension arrears resolution was voted on he would antagonize all measures with the tariff commission bill.

The bill to place Gen. Grant on the retired list came up, but in the absence of Mr. Logan was laid over without losing its place on the calendar.

The pensions arrears resolution was again taken up, and Mr. Maxey resumed his remarks in support of the amendment declaring in favor of the enlargement of the Mexican war pension list.

Mr. Beck argued that some limit should be placed on the business of granting pensions. The unfinished business was laid aside to allow Frye to deliver a set speech on the tariff, in which he argued that protection was necessary in this country for the encouragement of capital and as a protection to labor. He spoke until 3.30.

At 5.40 the senate went into executive session, and at 4 p. m. adjourned until Monday.

HOUSE.

FEB. 7.—A resolution was adopted directing the postmaster-general to furnish information concerning the custom of awarding contracts for carrying mails.

Mr. Prescott spoke forcibly in favor of the apportionment bill as reported from the census committee, of which he is chairman, and said the new method recommended by Chief Clerk Seaton of the census bureau had been adopted, and was more nearly just than the old. It gave one additional member to New York, Pennsylvania, and Illinois, which, on the old system, would go to California, Florida, and Rhode Island, and argued in favor of the bill on the basis of the wealth and taxes paid by each state.

Mr. Robinson (Mass.) said that when he examined the result of the two systems, and found that by the new Florida, California, and Rhode Island lines gave up a member each to Illinois, New York, and Pennsylvania he began to suspect that the proposed new method was not a just one. He argued that the new method, each representative in New York represented 145,000, when the old another Rhode Island representative 93,000. He favored the old system of apportionment, without change in the entire number.

Mr. Mills (Tex.) denounced the scheme of new system of apportionment as unjust, unconstitutional, and an outrage on the people of the states affected. His remarks were warmly applauded.

Mr. Horr (Mich.) said the new system was an outrage upon common sense. He favored the old system of fixing apportionment, and fixing the number of representatives at 321. He criticized the argument of Mr. Prescott, that the wealth of New York should be quoted when the question of representation is being considered. [Applause.]

Mr. Chace (R. I.) also spoke against the new method. Adjourned at 5 p. m.

FEB. 8.—Mr. Kasson, from the committee on ways and means, reported the tariff commission bill. Referred to committee of the whole. He stated that he would ask consideration as early as the business of the house permitted—probably within one week. Mr. Randall gave notice that he would at the proper time offer an amendment providing that the commission shall consist of two senators, three representatives and four experts.

The bill was reported for the erection of a public building in Fort Wayne, Ind.

The consideration of the apportionment bill was then resumed, Mr. Mills submitting an amendment fixing the number of representatives at 301.

The three-per cent. funding bill passed by the senate was taken from the speaker's table and referred to the ways and means committee.

At 5 o'clock the house took up the special order of the day, being eulogies upon the late Michael O'Connor, of South Carolina. Addresses were made by Messrs. Dibble, Randall, Bowman, Maginnis, Lindsey, Beltzhoover, Robinson (N. Y.), Evans, and Ellis, after which the house, at 4.30 p. m., adjourned.

FEB. 9.—Mr. Hewitt introduced a bill fixing a day for the meeting of the electors of president and vice-president, and providing for and regulating the counting of votes for president and vice-president, and the decision of questions arising therefrom. Referred.

Mr. Cox (N. Y.) spoke against the adjournment from Friday next to Monday at the present time, agreed to recommit the bill to the committee, with instructions to formulate a new one on the old system. He did not hold to the idea of the old system. He did hold to the idea of the old system, "should I be overwhelmed by the number." He believed the house was large "in the matter" that too small. Since the committee had indicated, however, that it would not accept it, he was willing to accept the number proposed by Conkling. Mr. Hewitt refused to permit interruptions, as the question of figures is a very delicate one. Mr. Tappler (ind.) did not think "should I be overwhelmed" by these miscellaneous attacks, there would be a whole bunch of figures ruthlessly raped right here." (Laughter.) "The new system," he continued, "guarded strenuously against the rights of small districts, and placed no limits upon large ones. It strained at the gnats and swallowed the camels. It was a mathematical predetermination to place small states at a disadvantage. Neither plan could do entire justice, but the old was the most nearly just to small and to large states."

Mr. Cox was followed by Tyler, Updegraff, and Burrows (Mich.) against the new system, the latter denouncing it as unwise, unjust, and monstrous in its principles and provisions. Adjourned at 5 p. m.

FEB. 10.—Mr. Guenther reported a resolution calling on the secretary of war as to whether the dam constructed for the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin rivers was not one of the principal agencies in producing the high stage of water in Lake Winnebago during the fall of 1881, and whether the dam cannot be lowered. Adopted.

The house went into committee of the whole on the private calendar, and took up the bill to remove the disabilities of Gen. S. T. Kirby, giving permission to the president to appoint him captain in the regular army, and spent nearly the whole afternoon in its consideration. Gen. Kirby had been court-martialed on charges of drunkenness and insulting the wife of an officer, and the bill is for the removal of the disabilities imposed by the judgment of the court-martial. The bill has been before congress five times. During its consideration by the house, a message was received from the senate amending the passage of the same bill. The bill finally passed by a vote of 97 to 63.

Bills were introduced to grant a charter to the Little Rock & Albuquerque railway, to open the Indian reservation, and authorizing the purchase of the Black Hills & Cheyenne telegraph line for military use.

A communication was received from the secretary of the treasury, giving the names of internal revenue employes killed and wounded in the service. The number killed, according to the record, is twenty-nine; the number wounded, fifty.

Adjourned until Monday.

AROUND THE COUNTY.

CLINTON.

Miss Allie Palmer, of Hudson, is visiting friends here.

Miss Grace Alvord commenced her first term of school in the Brooks' district this week.

Miss Kittie Vrooman who for some weeks has been discharging her duties as teacher in the public schools of Olivet is spending a vacation here.

Miss Ida McConnell who accepted the position as teacher in the primary department of this school is, we hear, decidedly successful.

An exchange in pulpits was made between Rev. I. M. Frey, of Clinton, and Mr. Gallagher, of Adrian, last Sunday. No service was held at the M. E. church on account of the absence of Rev. McIlwain.

Hon. Geo. M. Woodford, the eminent temperance lecturer of Illinois, spoke to quite a large audience in the Town Hall Sunday afternoon. The same gentleman is conducting a series of temperance meetings here this week.

Our little town seems to be losing its attractions in the eyes of many of its residents. Mr. Albert Rowland has sold his house and lot and goes in a few days to Tuscola county where he has purchased a farm. He will build a house on the place and move his family there as soon as arrangements can be made for their reception. A. B. Coffin has also disposed of his property in this place, and will locate elsewhere. The friends of J. B. Wells gave his hand a parting grip last Monday and bade him "good-bye" for an indefinite period. He is now bound for the west, and expresses himself to the effect that he does not regard the place to which he is going as his home for a year or two but considers it as a matter of fifteen or twenty years. Among his many acquaintances here there are few indeed who would not extend their good will to him and express their sincerest wishes for his success. There are several others who think their fortunes will be bettered by changing their location, and will soon depart.—May their fondest hopes be realized.

The social hop given by S. Erskine, landlord of the Silvers House last week was a highly successful affair.—He realized about forty dollars aside from expenses. But allowing that the receipts of the evening were less than his expenses, he would virtually have experienced no loss, for the excellent supper and the manner in which it was served was no small item, but it will be his gain in the future. There was a slight drawback in the matter of some gentlemen appearing without ladies. However there was one, who we concede was not to be blamed for that as his pecuniary resources were so far exhausted as to leave him with only fifty cents. Fortunately for the young gentleman the ticket seller was a kind sort of man and admitted him for half price. But all can easily see how embarassing it must have been for him to have escorted a lady under these circumstances.

EAST TECUMSEH.

Rec.—Mamie Gallatin.
Select Reading.—Mrs. R. R. Hall.
Vocal Music—Lillie Goheen and Nellie Boyce.
Rec.—Kate Boyce.

Instead of the debate the society will be favored with an address by Rev. R. S. Pardington. Subject,—"The Source and Force of Character."

The society will also hold a costume party at the residence of B.F. DePuy, Wednesday evening, March 1st. A cordial invitation is extended to all.

NELLIE BOYCE, Sec.

WEST TECUMSEH.

Ex-Sheriff, J. R. Cairns, and wife returned last week from an extended visit to Detroit and Grosse Isle.

G. W. Kinnicutt, who lives on the H. H. Keyser farm, expects to move next week to Oakland county, where he is to take charge of a large farm. Success to him.

J. F. N. Bowen has recently purchased some registered American Merino sheep of C. M. Fellows, of Manchester. They are from some of the best flocks in Vermont and are registered in the Vermont register.

F. W. DePuy has also purchased some fine sheep of GanGeisen Bros., of Bridgewater, and some from the Metler flock, of Marengo, Calhoun county, Mich.

The ice has been bad on our local telegraph line, but with the exception of two breaks, which were soon repaired, it has been working all right through the storm of the past few days.

Monday last Jerome Bowen went to Ypsilanti to attend an examination, as a witness, in a suit for non-support against a husband, the wife being complainant.

RIDGEWAY.

David Coryell has bought the place occupied by Sanford Hause. The old people are to live with him.

Lafayette Rappleye will soon take possession of the E. W. Rappleye lot south of the village, which he has recently purchased.

Next Sunday evening being the last in the month the regular meeting of the temperance alliance will be observed by a sermon or lecture from the pastor. The meeting of the alliance gave general satisfaction last week Wednesday evening. The program was well presented and the debate upon the question, Resolved, That man has done more for the cause of temperance than woman, was well discussed at length, the principal disputants being H. C. Wilson and Rufus Raymond.

Myron Curtis, a brother of Lyman A. and Hiram Curtis, who for years lived near Jehiel Davidson's farm, but more recently with Finlay Santus in Clinton co., whose wife is a daughter, died Sunday, and the remains were brought to Tecumseh Tuesday for interment.

Prof. Fred Morley, of Macon, has accepted the appointment of civil engineer, to survey a newly projected railroad in New Mexico. He leaves in a few days and will receive $100 a month and expenses.

MURDER AT DEERFIELD.

Last Sunday evening about six o'clock in the township of Deerfield Charles Colbath committed a murderous assault upon an old man named Cannon which may result fatally.—Colbath lives on forty acres of land near Sisson's station. Mr. Cannon is an old man over seventy years of age, who owns a large farm of 240 acres east of Colbath's. He is well off and frequently loans money to his neighbors. Last fall Colbath borrowed a sum of money of him and to secure the payment thereof gave him a chattel mortgage on a team and cow. Sometime after giving the mortgage he sold the team without Cannon's knowledge, and when Cannon ascertained this fact he took vigorous measures to collect what was due him at once. The chattel mortgage was placed in the hands of a constable and the latter seized the cow to hold as security until the debt should be paid. On Sunday, about five o'clock, Colbath went down to Cannon's house—who by the way is a widower and lives entirely alone—and while there got into a dispute with him about the chattel mortgage. He tried to get Cannon to make a deduction on the debt or to take part of it and surrender the cow, but Cannon firmly refused to make any concession, telling Colbath that he must see the officer and settle the matter wholly with him. This led to angry words and finally Colbath drew a pistol and shot the old man and then left the barn where the dispute occurred and fled. Cannon was disabled but could still hobble across the road to his son's house, where he dragged himself, and a doctor was sent for. Early Monday morning the sheriff was notified, a reward of $500 was offered for Colbath's arrest and a vigorous search began at once. The officers made quick work in hunting down the rascal, for he was caught Monday evening at his father's house in the city of Adrian. When the doctors were called to see Cannon, they first took a statement from him of the affair and reduced it to writing. They then put the patient under the influence of chloroform and explored the track of the ball. A probe was inserted to the depth of five inches. The ball struck the eleventh rib and went downwards, but they could not tell whether it lodged inside or outside the pelvic bone. The wound is a very dangerous one, and by reason of the old gentleman's age, it is more than likely to prove fatal.

The North American Review for March presents a striking array of articles, every one of which possesses the characteristic of contemporaneous interest.

MEETING OF THE LENAWEE COUNTY TEMPERANCE ALLIANCE.

The Lenawee county branch of the State Temperance Alliance held a meeting at Adrian Feb. 14, 1882, in accordance with arrangements made at the Tecumseh meeting of Dec. 28, 1881.

On motion W. S. Kimball, L. R. Damon and J. S. Kinney were appointed a committee on permanent organization. Committee retired and after consultation made the following report.

President—Rev. J. L. Hudson, of Morenci.

Secretary—A. P. Coddington, Tecumseh.

Treasurer—I. S. Osborn, Macon. (Postoffice address, Tecumseh.)

On motion, the report was accepted and adopted, and the above named officers declared duly elected for the ensuing year.

Rev. D. R. Shier of the committee on by-laws, reported the following by-laws:

ARTICLE 1st.—The Constitution and By-laws of the State Temperance Alliance shall be the Constitution of this Alliance, so far as they are a declaration of the principal and plan of work; and so far as they apply to county works, they are adopted for our guidance.

ART. 2d.—There shall be held at Adrian an annual meeting of this County Branch Alliance on the second Wednesday of January of each year, unless otherwise ordered by the annual meeting.

ART. 3d.—The officers shall be elected at each annual meeting, and shall hold their offices one year, or until their successors are elected.

ART. 4th.—The officers of this County Alliance shall constitute a county board that shall be empowered to act for the Alliance in calling special meetings, and in other duties which would naturally be transacted by such officers.

ART. 5th.—The county board shall have power to fill vacancies occuring in the board during the interim between annual meetings.

On motion, the report was accepted and the by-laws adopted as read.

Moved and supported that each town branch Alliance be assessed the sum of one dollar to meet the expenses of this Alliance, and that the secretary notify them to pay it to the treasurer. Motion adopted.

On motion, adjourned until 2 o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Alliance called to order at 2 o'clock P. M. by the President. Minutes of the morning session read and approved.

Bro. Shier of Hudson was called for and explained the objects and plans of the State Temperance Alliance, and the necessities for its organization and work, in a very able and lucid manner.

Bro. Wade of Detroit, being present, was called for and responded in a very eloquent and acceptable speech.

Rev. J. L. Hudson being called for, expressed his faith in the ultimate triumph of the temperance cause. He had long felt the need of just such an organization as the Temperance Alliance, which could command the means and votes, to hold the balance of power, and he believed, under good direction, it was to be the instrument to place Michigan in the ranks of the prohibition states and that very soon.

After some remarks by other members of the Alliance to the same general purport, and with a determination on the part of all present to put forth every effort in the great cause of Temperance and humanity the Alliance adjourned.

We clip the following from the Troy, N. Y. Times: Letters pour in daily, sometimes by dozens, scores, and hundreds, to Dr. David Kennedy, of Roundout, N. Y., in grateful acknowledgement of the great benefits received from his 'Favorite Remedy.' And they illustrate the power of the medicine in some new, and perhaps, hitherto untested phase of operation. But it is when a sufferer comes miles to tell the story of his deliverance in person, to grasp the doctor by the hand and greet him as a true and valued friend, that the interest in his case deepens and multiplies."

COMMENTS OF THE PRESS.

On the Peculiar Ways of Adrian's Missing Mayor.

We clip from our various exchanges a few of the comments found therein upon the fruitful theme of Navin and the water bonds.

So Tom Navin is in Mexico, is he? Perhaps he will meet Fitzsimmons, of the Tecumseh bank, down there.

Suggestions for a great seal of the city of Adrian: One of Navin's "Only lung pad" advertising cuts. They are striking, and would serve to remind all the world that Adrian is a live and enterprising town.

It is now charged that Tom Navin is the boy who bought up the Shewac-cae-mette boat club in the Hillsdale boat race—and banked $1000 the next day. In fact, there is no knowing what depths of degradation the young man has not explored. No one knows but it will yet be proven that he is the man who gave Joe Nadeau the stomach ache at Henley or loosened Paddy Ryan's truss at New Orleans.

When Mayor Navin, of Adrian, went south recently he took with him a $700 diamond pin which he bought of an Adrian jeweler—and didn't pay for.

At a meeting of the Joie de Vie club, Adrian's too-too bang-up social organization, held Wednesday night, President Jewel being unavoidably absent (in jail) sent in his resignation which was tabled. A resolution to excommunicate Tom Navin was offered and is now under consideration. Evidently Adrian is stricken to the very heart.

And now comes the horrible tale that the "Mrs. Gray," whose fortunes are so strangely linked with those of Adrian's mayor on-the-wing, was a student of a Detroit female seminary, who ran away with the festive kid, and as "Mrs. Tom Gray" lived happy in his love, in Chicago, where she became the proud mother of a boy who is the very image of the fly-by-night mayor.

Adrian had a smart Mayor "Kid"
He got brokers on bogus bonds to bid,
And they he did.
Ah, yes he did.
And since, water time of raisin'
There's been, over bad Tommy Navin.
We'll wager a big water bond
That he's gone to seek a pond
For the works' supply,
And then he'll die
Oh, yes he'll die
Back in the spring.

Tom Knavin, the metoric young mayor of Adrian, has not yet been heard from, since his sudden departure last week. Tom will doubtless go right over to Turkey and get into the mayor business there, start a harem and ultimately become a Pasha of six tails and prime minister to the Grand Porte.

The "kid" Mayor of Adrian turns out to be a full grown goat of the worst kind.

The Adrian common council at its meeting on Saturday failed to pass a resolution offering a reward for the arrest of their absent mayor. There seems to be a sentiment in that council opposed to having him caught—or at least against paying anything for his capture—and such fellows are never captured unless somebody is paid for the job. If this thing is kept up folks will begin to ask "Why?"

A "fresh and verdant" youth from the old country came to the barber shop of Dell Peany last Saturday, and being unable to explain what he wanted, the barber managed to get him into the chair and proceeded to cut his hair which needed trimming very bad. It was not until the mother of the youth appeared upon the scene that the matter was really understood, when it was learned that it was not a hair cut that was wanted, but a "toot putt." And so it was that Dell was a quarter ahead, and the "toot vas putt" by Dr. Owen afterwards.—Blissfield Advance.

A good Baptist clergyman of Bergen, N. Y., a strong temperance man, suffered with kidney trouble, neuralgia, and dizziness almost to blindness, over two years after he was told that Hop Bitters would cure him, because he was afraid of and prejudiced against "Bitters." Since his cure he says none need fear but trust in Hop Bitters.

"I WANT TO BE AN ARCHER."

I want to be an archer,
And with the archer stand
A quiver full of arrows,
A Lancewood in my hand.
There right before the target
But not too far away,
I'll send my arrows whizzing
And practice every day.

I never shall be weary
Or ever miss a meal,
Nor ever on my fingers
An annoying blister feel
When with my bow and arrow
I'd shoot with all my might,
And send my arrows flying
Far, good, straight and light.

I know I'm quite unskilled,
But hope I will improve;
For many men and maidens
Have learned the sport to love.
Oh, archery is very serious
Has closed because of cold,
I intend that every arrow
I may loose will find the gold.

Oh! then I'll be an archer
And with the archers stand;
A champion medal on my breast
A prize bow in my hand.
And right before the target,
With colored face so bright
I'll join the merry bowmen,
And shoot from morn till night.

A LITTLE GRAVE.

BY LOUIS KENT.

A little grave on the hillside,
Where the willows droop and weep;
A little form daintily shrouded
A little one fallen asleep.

A little grave on the hillside,
Where the earliest violets bloom
A little voice hushed forever
Asleep in the silent tomb.

A little grave on the hillside.
A sad and desolate home;
Hearts that are almost broken
Mourning the absent one.

A little grave on the hillside,
An empty cradle and chair,
A little dress, a worn out shoe,
And a lock of curling hair.

A little grave on the hillside,
Where the breezes softly blow,
Where the birds sweet requiems sing
O er that little grave so low.

A little grave on the hillside
A little one fallen asleep.
Death is only eternal life;
Alas, why should we weep?

HOW RUFUS SIGNED THE PLEDGE.

BY M. E. ROWLAND.

The great bell in the mill had just clanged the hour of six, and Rufus White, who, for the first time in two weeks, had been at work a whole day, now threw aside his apron and started for home. "Home," did I say? Ah! it was a poor apology for that blessed place, a mean little room whose only furniture was that which sheer necessity demanded.

There were no signs of a joyous welcome as Rufus drew near, for he and an only son, a gentle boy of nine years, were all that run, poverty, sickness and sorrow had left of a once large family.

Five years before, his wife, a quiet, timid woman, worn out in the long conflict with the drink-fiend, had in utter broken-heartedness, lain down to die. Rufus, sobered by the awful fact, had striven desperately with his besetment, and sitting beside her in shame and remorse, had listened to her earnest pleadings, and made many fair vows, that, alas! had long since been snapped like reeds. Just as the thick mists of the "valley of the shadow" were stealing over her sad eyes, she threw one arm about their sleeping boy, and clasping her other hand around that of her husband, whispered: "O, Rufus, be good to darling Willie!" And then "the golden bowl was broken, the spirit returned to God who gave it." For a long time her dying words lingered in his ears, but he gradually returned to his idle, drinking ways. His child had lived with a relative until her death sent the little waif back to his careless father and the shadows of the old home.

Ah! these last two years! What an age of fear, hunger and neglect had they been to Willie!

Rufus could always find employment, but would not work over a week ere he would be off on a long period of dissipation; and his sad, lonely boy used at first to entreat his father, with all the hopefulness of childhood, to do better, and in the old, first days, the fond arms of his child really held him in check. He did try in a weak way, but he soon grew harsh, sullen or angry, so the little one ceased pleading, and went wearily on.

He it was who did the simple home duties, and made the most of a little, uncomplainingly; but he was a shrinking, sensitive child. He had come to them after a long period of unusual bitterness and sorrow. Thus it was his birth-right. He never ran out to play among the boys, but sat alone, or fondled a poor little dog, that learned with him to crouch and hide away when he heard the uncertain step of Rufus.

But to return to Rufus and our story. As he came up the path this sunny afternoon, he heard no sound within doors, and wondered, half angry, for Willie was usually preparing supper at this hour. The silence startled him, and he threw open the door, when lo! the little dog sprang up with an almost human cry, and then ran back toward the stove.

Rufus rushed after him, and there, to his horror, he saw his boy, his only child, lying prostrate upon the hard floor uttering groans of agony. All the latent fatherhood in his nature sprang to the rescue. In wild haste he lifted the lad in his arms, and bore him to the bed.

O, how the child screamed! He was fearfully burned. He had evidently slipped while pouring water from the kettle, and so pulled it over upon him, receiving the boiling contents upon his chest.

It was fatal, as he had lain there so long. Rufus hastily called the neighbors, who ran for medical aid; but none could be had for hours, and alas! the poor, ignorant creatures about the child could minister but feebly to his comfort.

It grew dark, and those who came had to return to their families. So Rufus sat alone with the child, in horror-stricken silence, until it was too awful to be borne, and he began to abhor and upbraid himself to his child.

He was fully sober, and he really did love his pretty, gentle boy. So now, he cried out in his anguish and remorse: "Oh! Willie, Willie, your wretched father has killed you. You, my darling, my all! O! Willie, if you would only blame me, despise me, curse me, child, not lay there and moan, I could bear it. But no, no! I am a fiend, a heartless wretch, and have been these five long, wretched years. I broke your mother's heart, and she slipped away from me, to meet her helpless babes that I had starved out of the world. O! Willie, Willie, that ever I was born!"

The wretched man threw his arms across the bed and buried his face in the counterpane, and there in their helplessness they waited and watched the sombre shadows made by the tiny candle, Rufus yearning wildly for the doctor's coming, Willie growing less and less conscious of anything. After a while Rufus gave a deep groan, and the child started and sleepily said softly:

"Father, don't feel so. It is better as it is. I'll see mother, you know."

O, how that poor, hungry little soul dwelt on that word "mother!" Such a wealth of comfort her memory had been to him! Presently, he said:

"Father!"

"Well, Willie?"

And Willie said in half whispers:

"You know the time—the time you whipped me so, father?"

"Yes, dear, yes. O; spare me, child!"

"Well, father, it was the pledge, you know. All the boy's fathers had been to the meetings and signed, but mine; and O, father, I felt so bad to hear them speak so of you. 'Old Rufe White,' they called you, father, and I said to them, 'He will sign for me, I know.' But father, you know you—you—never mind now. But I got one—a real 'Murphy' pledge, and a ribbon; and I signed it and put it on my neck, by the blue ribbon, for I thought maybe—perhaps—"

"Great God, lad! Say it out! You thought your beast of a father would beat you if he saw it in the house, O, Willie, Willie!"

He threw his head down again, and the child went on softly:

"Hush, father. If you thought that I must die, and it would please me best of all to have you do it, wouldn't you? O! will you not sign your name under mine? Please, father, please do!"

The poor child shrank at his own words, and shut his eyes, half fearing a blow. But Rufus groaned out:

"O, Willie, dear lad, don't say that—not that! You must not die! You shall not die!"

The child struggled feebly and took the ribbon, with pledge attached from his neck, keeping it just out of his father's reach, so great was his fear. But he said:

"Yes, I signed. See! It says, 'God helping me.' And my teacher said He would help anybody—me and you, father. O, father, you can leave off drink if He helps you, and you will try, won't you?"

The child put forth his hand to meet his father's, his blue eyes shining like stars, so eager was he. But alas! it was too much. With a quick gasping sigh, he clasped his other hand upon his heart, and fell back. The blue eyes looked straight upward but with a gasp he murmured: "Father, try!" And Rufus, bending above the boy, burst into a storm of tenderness and weeping, begging him to "forgive him, to stay with him, to wait, wait!" Ah it was in vain Rufus had been a strong man once, but liquor had taken his firmness with his handsome looks long ago, and now he laid his dead boy back very softly, and fell, upon his knees beside the bed, weeping like a woman, and crying out in the half-darkness for "Willie! Willie!"

Idle cry! The gentle spirit was far beyond his voice now. The lips that had ever been swift to give reply were growing white and cold. The fair face had no life-light upon it now, but the slight hand still grasped tightly the blessed pledge.

After awhile Rufus began to grow calm, and, as all of us have done, he cast his thoughts backward into the past, and conscience encouraged memory to place before him many a bitter draught.

He folded his arms in deep dejection, and gazed upon his beautiful, dear child, while memory brought back to him the last words of her whom he had promised to love and cherish: "Rufus, Rufus, be good to darling Willie." And conscience, stern accuser, said in solemn voice: "Have you remembered? Have you been good to Willie?"

O, the bitterness of this hour! "Good to Willie!" He gazed upon his child, and, with a tender touch, put back the fair hair; and there upon the young brow lay an ugly scar. It seemed to him like the eye of an avenging angel, and pierced his very soul. He grew aghast, and clasping his hands, he cried out, like Cain: "O, God! My punishment is greater than I can bear!"

His eyes fell upon the little hand and its treasure, and he gently untwisted the fingers and carried the card to the candle. How it melted him! There, in broken, school-boy hand was the simple name, "Willie White," with room beneath for his own. He read it all over carefully and Willie's words came to him—"Teacher said He would help anybody—me, and you, father. O, father, you can leave off drink if He helps you, and you will try, won't you, father?"

There had been a time in Rufus White's life when he had known, by happy experience, that God would help him, and now he sat and thought it all over. "God helping him," he would try; but, alas! what a miserable prodigal he had been! Could he ask to be taken back? Suppose he did not ask; he could grow no better by waiting. Ah! these wretched years had fully proved the force of the dear Christ's words: "Without Me, ye can do nothing." Yes, God helping him he would return.

The physician and friends now entered, but, shocked to find his assistance vain, the former returned, and his friends begged poor Rufus to leave his silent treasure with them. So, taking the little card, he went up to the loft or garret. And now began the struggle. How he wept and prayed for pardon! In self abasement he smote upon his breast, and cried like one of old: "Lord, be merciful to me, a sinner!" The conflict was severe, and realizing more and more this great need, he cried out in awful earnest: "Jesus, thou Son of David, have mercy on me!" And there at the foot of the cross he found the gift the Holy One came to bring—repentance and forgiveness of sins. He cried for freedom, for the removal of the terrible thirst which was consuming him; and when the birds sang in the early morning shadows, he whom Satan had bound these ten years, arose, stood up free, and glorified God!" He was a man once more, bless God! He knew it, and with a trembling hand he wrote his name beside that of his dead darling, and baptized them with his tears. Yes, his burden was gone. He was free. He felt it. There was within that happy sense of a terrible something lifted, removed. He felt the desire for a new life through his soul, and he knew the thrill of the Divine touch.

neck, and then, alone, in the presence of the great, invisible Life and Death, he knelt and prayed aloud—prayed as if he longed the quiet sleeper could hear, and know that he solemnly repented; prayed that all the dark past might be washed white, and that henceforth he might stand and show others the way. And God heard the yearning cry. He did so stand. Years have passed since then, and to-night Rufus White is a gray-haired man—one who watches, after a long day of loving service, beside the dead, waiting to be ferried home.

Later he went softly down, and there he saw his little lad asleep in his rear row silk-lined bed, no trace of last night's agony upon the sweet face, and with still hands folded. With gentle fingers Rufus slipped the blue ribbon about the snowy

Old Keys of the Treasury.

Mr. Gilfillan, while Treasurer of the United States, completed a collection of keys to the United States Treasury vaults and money-boxes in use before the introduction of combination locks. The collection numbers fifteen keys, which have been arranged in a neat walnut case, and they decorate the walls of the Treasurer's office. The first in chronological order is a veritable patriarch of the key family. It is about seven inches long, weighs over a pound, and makes a great display of notches which fitted into the complicated wards of the lock. Judging from the finish of the key, the lock was evidently regarded in its day as a masterpiece of ingenuity and mechanism. Modern experts wouls smile at such a barrier between themselves and the glittering treasure. The known history of this key goes back at least half a century, and its custodian for years was a Virginian named Colonel Nutt, the cashier in the Treasurer's office. The Colonel was, according to accounts, a true type of the old-time Virginian — tall, erect, and measuring over six feet, wearing a certain air of the cavalier which would have justified some notions of the boasted chivalry of the Old Dominion. He lived on the soil of his native state, and every morning rode into Washington over the long bridge; in summer time, tying his raw-boned Virginian pacer in a grove near the Department, where mighty buildings now stand, the Colonel strode along the corridors of the Treasury, with his spurs clanking on the paved way, and, cracking his riding-whip, swaggered into his office. His first act was to haul the immense safe-key out of a wallet he carried about his person, and to an admiring audience of accountants, tellers, clerks, messengers, and boys, would preface the formality of opening the antique strap-iron box, by descanting on the complicated interior arrangement of the lock, and the number of tumblers the awe-inspiring instrument he held in his hand knocked down in a single turn in the intricate wards. The money-boxes, too, were a never-ending and fruitful theme of the venerable Nutt's admiration. He spoke of the welded straps of iron and the innumerable bolts which marked each intersection of the web.

The Colonel continued in office until Virginia joined her fortunes to the conspiracy against the Union, and then one afternoon, after he had drawn his pay, was last seen cantering toward the Potomac and across into his native state.

Another key, as large as Colonel Nutt's and much more worn, has its notches shaped like the letter T. It is said that from this the key represented in the seal in the Treasury department was designed. As the improvements in locks began, a notable change in the formation of keys is indicated. Next comes a pair that resemble the handle of a tourniquet, and following the immediate stages are two heavy brace-keys, containing in themselves a combination formed by strips of metal of different lengths and numbered. The combinations were varied by changing the arrangements of these strips in the key. As lock-picking grew to be an art, and the ingenuity of the inventor was brought into competition with the ingenuity of the burglar, the use of keys was abandoned, and from year to year, as millions of treasure and securities and notes filled the vaults, all the latest and most secure appliances were introduced. After careful and thoughtful examination, the Sargent time and chronometer combination lock was adopted a few years ago. There are ten of these locks on each vault. Every night, under the superintendence of the Treasurer, and by trusted and tried custodians, each chronometer in the lock is wound and set for 8:30 a. m. When once in motion, there is no possible way to open it, even by the officers authorized to know the combination. No key is used, the whole delicate mechanism responding to a limit of time and the application of a word or figures to the parts forming the combination.

Effects of Beer Drinking.

The constant use of beer is found to produce a species of degeneration of all the organism, profound and deep-seated. Fatty deposits, diminished circulation, conditions of congestion, and perversion of functional activities, local inflammation of both the liver and kidneys, are constantly present. Intellectually, a stupor amounting almost to paralysis arrests the reason, precipitating all the higher faculties into a mere animalism, sensual, selfish, sluggish, varied only with paroxysms of anger that are senseless and brutal.

In appearance the beer drinker may be the picture of health, but in reality he is most incapable of resisting disease. A slight injury, severe cold, or shock to the body or mind, will commonly provoke acute disease, ending fatally. Compared with inebriates who use different forms of alcohol, he is more incurable, and more generally diseased. The constant use of beer every day gives the system no time for recuperation, but steadily lowers the vital forces.

It is our observation that beer-drinking in this country produces the very lowest forms of inebriety, closely allied to criminal insanity. The most dangerous class of tramps and ruffians in our cities are beer drinkers. It is asserted by competent authority that the evils of heredity are more positive in this class than from alcoholics.

If these facts are well founded, the recourse to beer as a substitute for alcohol merely increases the danger and fatality following.—Medical Record.

Diphtheria.

SOME ACCOUNT OF THE TERRIBLE DISORDER.

Diphtheria is believed to have originated in Egypt more than 2,000 years ago. It prevailed in Egypt and Asia Minor, to which latter country it extended during the first five hundred years, and was early called the Egyptian or Syrian ulcers. Having invaded Spain, Italy, and Sicily, and other European countries, the disease appeared in Rome A. D. 334, and being highly contagious, rarely appearing as a sporadic disease, more frequently in an epidemic form, in its 1,569 years' run it on the continent of Europe, it affected mainly rural districts and garrisoned towns; sometimes it has prevailed so extensively that distant countries have been simultaneously, or successively, visited by it. It extended to Holland, in which it was epidemic in 1837, to France in 1818 and 1835, and in England, the United States and Canadas from 1857 to 1860, and more or less since. As to the prevention of this formidable disease, some very excellent suggestions can be advanced. It has been noticed that where diphtheria has occurred, after thoroughly investigating the premises, sufficient cause has been discovered to produce it, either in a neglected cellar, cesspool, or in deficient trapping of sewer pipes. All these should be carefully inspected, and if the cellar should be found damp and badly ventilated, and containing vegetable matter of any kind, all articles that might possibly become putrid or decayed should be removed at once, the cellar thoroughly ventilated, the walls and ceilings should be whitewashed, and disinfectants liberally scattered over the floor. Chloride of lime is the best one for this purpose. Next, the water-closets should be looked after; if they are located in the house, they should be examined by an honest and experienced plumber, to see if they are properly trapped, and one-half pound sulphate of iron (copperas,) dissolved in two gallons of hot water, thrown into them at least twice a week. If there are any cesspools in the yard convenient to the house, pipes should be arranged to carry off the impurities; they should be at least three inches in diameter, and high enough to carry the effluvia above the dwelling-house. If there are any stationary washstands in the house, they should also be carefully examined by a competent plumber, as to the traps being safe. As to the treatment, quite a variety of plans have been pursued; so much interest has been taken throughout the world to make the treatment more successful, that almost all European countries and the United States have offered premiums for the most successful mode of treating this terrible disease. As an example, her Majesty, tha German Empress and Queen of Prussia, offered a prize of 2,000 reichmarks for the best essay on the essence of diphtheria and the result of treatment of the disease, based on the knowledge of the nature of the affection.

How to Discourage Your Minister.

"Hear him "now and then." Drop in a little late." Do not sing; do not find the text in your Bible. If you take a little nap during the sermon, so much the better. It shows that you enjoy it.

Notice carefully any slip he makes while you are awake; point out the dull portion to your family and friends; quote what is in bad taste; mark all neglects of your advice; find all the fault you can; it will be very apt to reach his ears.

Censure his efforts at usefulness; deplore his want of good sense; let him know that you won't help him because A. B. does, because you were not first consulted, or because you did not start the plan yourself.

Let him know the folly and sins of his hearers. Show him how much he overrates them, and tell him their adverse criticisms on himself.

Tell him when he calls what a stranger he is; how his predecessors used to drop in for an hour's chat, and how much you liked them.

Never attend the prayer-meeting; frequent no special service. Why should you be righteous overmuch?

Occasionally get up a little gayety for the young folks. This will be very effectual about the communion season. "There is a time to dance."

Give him no intimation when you are ill; of course he should know; and your offended dignity, when he comes to see you, will render his visit pleasant. On no account intimate your recovery.

Require him to swell the pomp of every important occasion, unless, indeed, there are prudential reasons for passing him over.

If he is regularly in his pulpit, clamor for strangers; if he has public duties, and sometimes goes abroad, complain that he is never at home.

Keep down his income. Easy means are a sore temptation, and fullness of bread and meat is bad for every one—but the laity.

As he will find it hard to be always at home to receive callers, and always running among the people, and always well prepared for pulpit and platform, you will be sure to have just cause for complaint one way or the other. Tell it to every one, and then lament that there is so general dissatisfaction with him.

Patient continuance in courses like these, modified according to circumstances, has been known not only to discourage, but to ruin the usefulness and break the spirit of ministers; to send them off to other charges, and sometimes to their graves. Those who desire to avoid such results should avoid the practice of such things as are here referred to. Let us "help one another."

THE MINISTER'S WIFE.—Great expectations are looked for from the minister's wife. It has been said she ought to have been selected by a committee of the church. She should be warranted never to have headache or neuralgia; she should have nerves of wire and sinews of iron; she should never be tired or sleepy, and should be everybody's cheerful drudge; she should be cheerful, intellectual, pious and domesticated; she should be able to keep her husband's house, darn his stockings, make his shirts, cook his dinner, light his fire and copy his sermons; she should keep up the style of a lady, and be always at leisure for "good work," and ready to receive morning calls; she should be secretary of the Band of Hope, the Dorcas Society and the Home Mission; she should conduct Bible classes and mother's meetings; she should make clothes for the poor, and gruel for the sick; and finally, she should be pleased with everybody and everything, and never desire any reward beyond the satisfaction of having done her own duty and other people's too.

A NEW WAY TO FIGHT A BEAR.—An Englishman visiting Albany had recently returned from a hunting tour in the Rocky Mountains. He abounded in description of hair-breadth and marvelous escapes.

One evening, surronded by a bevy of young ladies, he was describing his condition when lost in one of the western canons, "I lay down," he said, "exhausted, and wrapped myself in my blanket, with the single (or double) exception of my feet, which protruded from the covering. Stealing down the side of the canon came a grizzly bear and her half grown cub. I knew that resistance was hopeless. I had read that to feign death would give me a chance to escape.

'I lay as one dead. The bears approached slowly and cautiously. I felt their hot breath as they smelt of my feet. Suddenly they turned and fled as if seized with uncontrollable panic, while more dead than alive I rejoiced in my wonderful escape." If that Englishman could have heard those girls laugh after he left, he would not have seen the reason of their merriment.—Albany Times.

Johnny's Arithmetic.

The unconscious point of infant prattle and inquisitiveness is sometimes sharper than deliberate rebuke. The following may be true or not, but it serves well as an illustration:

Johnny was poring over his mental arithmetic. It was a new study to him, and he found it interesting. When Johnny undertook anything he went about it with heart, head and hand.

He sat on his high stool at the table, while his father sat just opposite. He was such a tiny fellow, scarcely large enough to hold the book, you would think, much less to study and calculate. But he could do both, as you shall see.

Johnny's father had been speaking to his mother, and Johnny had been so intent on his book that he had not heard a word; but as he leaned back in his high chair to rest a moment, he heard his father say: "Dean got beastly drunk at the club last night; he drank ten glasses of wine. I was disgusted with the fellow."

Johnny looked up with bright eyes and said: "How many did you drink, father?"

"I drank but one, my son," said the father, smiling down upon his little boy.

"Then you were only one-tenth drunk," said Johnny, reflectively.

"Johnny!" cried his parents, sternly, in a breath; but Johnny continued with a studious air:

"Why, yes, if ten glasses of wine makes a man beastly drunk, one glass will make him one-tenth part drunk, and—"

"There, there!" interrupted the father, biting his lip to hide the smile that would come, "I guess it is bedtime for you. We will have no more arithmetic to-night."

So Johnny was tucked away in bed, and went sound asleep, turning the problem over and over to see if he was wrong. And just before he had lost himself in slumber he had thought: "One thing is sure, if Dean hadn't taken the one glass he would not have been drunk; and if father had taken nine more he would have been drunk; so it is the safest way not to take any, and I never will."

About Albums.

Extremely pretty and very amusing picture albums are made from out of date fashion plates. Select suitable figures, cut them out, arrange them singly or in groups, with photographic heads of friends or celebrated people where the head of the original was, and you have a most amusing page before you. If you possess some artistic skill, a bit of scenery may be sketched in with color, shadows added, and the picture is complete. Some of the French plates are the most effective. A friend's face may be fitted into a becoming hat or bonnet, and the face colored to make the whole complete. This is quickly done by mixing a little liquid gum with the color, or putting it in, delicately tinting the cheeks brightly, while still wet. Sweet faces of old friends, frightful in the old-fashioned and ugly garments, are cleverly rejuvenated in these French toilets, and then rephotographed. The center of a screen was cleverly arranged from these plates with photographic faces. It consisted of a group of friends, both gentlemen and ladies, arranged as if sitting in an opera box, and was made with a gold background, which produced a very beautiful effect, as it throws up the bright colors of the dresses and resembles oiled panelling. Groups formed of children in the extravagant but picturesque costumes of those plates, but with the faces of the children of our love, are as if they had been touched with a magic wand, and turned into the queens and princes of fairy land. The diversion of arranging the groups and selecting the costumes from such an embarrassment of pretty things as the French plates offer, is thoroughly appreciated by an invalid or sick child, to whom amusement and occupation are of more worth than all the physic that Macbeth thought fit only to throw to dogs.

The Sunflower.

In many districts in the West the traveler will see growing immediately about the doors of farm-houses beds of sunflowers. The belief of many is that the growing sunflower is a protection against malaria and a preventive of the low fevers of malarious districts. This plant, we believe, is made of small practical use in America. A scientific writer upon the helianthus says:

"Elsewhere the sunflower, if not admired, is esteemed for practical reasons. Many of our native aboriginals make bread of its seeds. It is cultivated in the south of Europe sometimes as a field crop, the seeds being used as a food for cattle and poultry, and also for making oil, which is little inferior to olive oil; is burned in lamps and employed in the manufacture of soap. Meal and bread are said to be got from the seeds in Portugal, and these, roasted, are often substituted for coffee. The seeds are often used like almonds for soothing emulsions, and in some parts of the Old World and boiled and fed to infants. The leaves are good fodder for cattle, the stems serve for fuel, and contain much potash. The different species of sunflower indigenous to the United States number some forty, scattered from ocean to ocean, and from New England to the Gulf. For a plant generally counted unworthy, as it is with us, it surely has many valuable uses.

The True Lady.

The lady does not lose caste because she makes her own clothes, and is obliged to economise. A "lady" is a woman who clearly understands and consistently practices the refinements of a highly civilized existence; and the most real distinction between a lady and a woman who is not a lady, is that one is more civilized than the other, and more determined to preserve the habits of a high civilization, both in her own person and in all those over whom she has authority. These habits are not simply habits of expense; it is cheaper to remain sober than to get tipsy, and yet is more lady-like to be sober.

It does not cost more money to speak good English than bad, or to be gentle than rude; yet a lady from preference, speaks correctly and has gentle manners. It so happens by the force of circumstances that there are more ladies in the upper classes than in the lower, and that there is a severe public opinion in the upper classes about most things which, taken together, constitute civilization, because it is a fault in rich people who have great facilities not to be clean, and cultivated, and polite, when it may only be a misfortune in poor ones. There is, then, really such a thing as ladyhood, and it is one of the strongest of civilizing influences.

Sermons at Funerals.

The Hon. Robert C. Winthrop, of Boston, in a recent address before the Massachusetts Historical Society, stated that there were no religious services or sermons at funerals during the early period of Colonial history, and—strange as it may seem—the first prayer at a funeral in Boston was as late as 1766, and the first funeral sermon was as late as 1783. The custom was when some conspicuous citizen died, for the clergy and officials of the town to get together and pass resolutions formally expressing their sorrow, and sometimes in addition the military companies would turn out and fire a salute.

When Gov. Winthrop died, in 1649, the clergy and deacons, and principal persons of Boston assembled at his late residence, and held a consultation as to the best method of conducting the funeral, "it being the desire of all that in that solemnity it may appear of what precious account and desert he hath been, and how blessed his memorial." There was a great concourse of people, and many manifestations of sorrow for the departed Governor, but neither funeral oration, prayer nor sermon was delivered. A barrel and a half of Colony powder was used on the occasion by the artillery company, and the general court (common council) passed an ordinance justifying the lavish expenditure out of respect for the memory of the late Governor.

Not to be Sneezed at.

That pure, sweet, safe and effective American distillation of witch hazel, American pine, Canada fir, marigold and clover blossom, called Sanford's Radical Cure for Catarrh. A few doses instantly relieve the most violent sneezing or head cold, stop all watery discharges from the nose and eyes, cure headache and nervousness, and banish all danger of fever. Complete treatment for one dollar.

Death.

It is the thought of death that is terrible, not death. Death is gentle, peaceful, painless; instead of bringing suffering it brings an end of suffering. It is misery's cure. Where death is, agony is not. The processes of death are all friendly. The near aspect of death is gracious. There is a picture somewhere of a tearful face, livid and ghastly, which the beholder gazes on with horror, and would turn away from but for the hideous fascination that not only rivets his attention, but draws him closer to it. On approaching the picture the hideousness disappears, and when directly confronted it is no longer seen; the face is that of an angel. It is a picture of death, and the object of the artist was to impress the idea that terror of death was an apprehension. Theodore Parker, whose observation of death was very large, has said he never had seen a person of any belief, condition or experience, unwilling to die when the time came. Death is an ordinance of nature, is directed by beneficent ends. What must be is made welcome.

Experience the Best Guide.

The reason why women everywhere use Parker's Ginger Tonic is because they have learned by experience—the best guide—that this excellent medicine overcomes despondency, periodical headache, indigestion, pain in the back and kidneys, and other troubles of the sex.—Home Journal.

Your Local Paper.

You might nearly as well forget your churches, your academies and school houses, as to forget your local paper. It speaks to ten times the audiences that your local minister does. It is read eagerly each day and week from beginning to end. It reaches you all, and, as it has a lower spirit and less wisdom than a sermon, it has a thousand times better chance at you. Lying, as it does, on every table in almost every house, you owe to yourselves to liberally add to its support and exact from it as heightened a character as you do from an educator in your midst. It is in no sense below notice and care—unless you yourself are below notice and care—for it is your representative. Indeed, in its character, it is the sublimation of the importance, interest and welfare of all. It is the aggregate of your own consequence, and you cannot ignore it without miserably depreciating yourself.

Terrible itching and scaly humors, ulcers, sores, and scrofulous swellings cured by the Cuticura and Cuticura Soap (the great skin cures) externally, and Cuticura Resolvent (blood purifier) internally. Ask about them at your druggists.

What it Costs to Smoke.

The cost of regular smoking is shown by the following computation, upon the basis of a weekly expenditure of one dollar, the amount, $26, being brought in as capital at the end of every six months, at 7 per cent per annum compound interest. It amounts to, at the end of

5 years	$ 364.96	45 years	$5,680.59
10 "	735.15	50 "	22,423.98
15 "	1,341.97	55 "	31,936.19
20 "	2,193.94	60 "	45,354.11
25 "	3,405.37	65 "	64,281.41
30 "	5,108.56	70 "	90,986.22
35 "	7,511.08	75 "	128,641.64
40 "	10,900.67	80 "	181,773.12

Most smokers (of cigars) will pay out at least 25 cents a day for "the weed," at which rate the amounts in the above table would be nearly doubled. Moral: Don't smoke.

Faded Colors Restored.

Faded or gray hair gradually recovers its youthful color and lustre by the use of Parker's Hair Balsam, an elegant dressing, admired for its purity and rich perfume.

There are 12,000 dentists in the United States, who annually extract 20,000,000 teeth, manufacture and insert 3,000,000 artificial teeth, and hide away in the cavities of various teeth three tons of pure gold, to say nothing about the tons of mercury, tin, silver, and other metals employed in filling.

A Instance of Tact.

A wealthy lady had issued invitations for a dinner party of twelve, and on the morning of the appointed day, when conferring with her head servant, a very accomplished and well-trained waiter, she discovered that one of the twelve silver shells, in which escalloped oysters were to be served, had been misplaced. Rigid search for the missing article having proved unavailing, the lady decided that, sooner than give up that particular course, she would simply decline oysters, when they were handed her, and so the eleven shells would be sufficient. But when he handed her the oysters at dinner she was interested in conversation, and mechanically took them. If the servant's heart fell in consternation at this, he gave no external sign of it, but speaking in tones distinct, though low, said, respectfully: "Excuse me, madam, but you said I was to remind you that the doctor forbade your eating oysters." His mistress laughed and returned the oysters to the waiter, saying in explanation to her guests: "I am so absent-minded that I have to engage Thomas to remember things for me sometimes," which, indeed, was literally true.

Have You Ever

Known any person to be seriously ill without a weak stomach or inactive liver or kidneys? And when these organs are in good condition do you not find their possessor enjoying good health? Parker's Ginger Tonic regulates these important organs, makes the blood rich and pure, and strengthens every part of the system. See other column.

Winter Protection of Grape Vines.

A correspondent writes to us for our views on wintering grape vines in an elevated region; whether laying them down, or leaving them exposed with some protection around the roots would be the better way.

To this we can only reply that our experience leads us to prefer taking the vines down from the trellis and laying them upon the ground, and, if it be practicable, it is very advantageous to cover the vines with a few evergreen boughs. A variety of grape that will not pass the winter safely in this way had better be dug up, and a more hardy kind put in its place. There are a number of hardy vines now in cultivation which ripen their fruit early, and which will yield a good crop of grapes and ripen them thoroughly in a dry climate. We should expect to succeed with the Concord, Creveling, Eumelan, Telegraph, Champion, Wilder, Massasoit, Martha, Burnet and Moore's Early.—Canadian Horticulturist.

Brain and Nerve.

Wells' Health Renewer, greatest remedy on earth for impotence, leanedness and sexual debility, &c. $1. at druggists. Mich. Depot, J. E. Davis & Co., Detroit Mich.

A story is told of a great French satirist, which finely illustrates his knowledge of human nature. He was traveling in Germany, in entire ignorance of its language and currency. Having obtained some small change for some of his French coins, he used to pay drivers in the following manner: Taking a handful of numismatical specimens from his pocket, he counted them one by one into the creditor's hands, keeping his eye fixed on the receiver's face. As soon as he perceived the least twinkle of a smile, he took back the last coin deposited in the hand, and returned it, with the remainder to his pocket. He afterward found that in pursuing this method he had not overpaid for anything.

Permit No Substitution.

Insist upon obtaining Floreston Cologne. It is pre eminently superior in prominence and rich delicacy of fragrance.

ALCOHOL AND FROST.—A London medical journal says: "When a man takes a glass of spirits and water he feels warmed, but the sensation is the direct result of nerve stimulation which means nothing, and will do nothing in the way of heat. Unless food is taken with alcohol, there is no addition to the stock of nutrient fuel. The spirit passes away and leaves the organism colder instead of warmer for its exhibition, unless, as we have said, food be taken at the same time. The notion of 'keeping the cold out,' by a glass of warm spirits is wholly illusory. The effect produced, when the potion seems to do good, is nervous and mental. In so far as it acts at all, the stimulant must do harm by relaxing the skin, and leaving it more exposed to the debilitating action of external cold."

Don't Die in the House.

Ask druggists for "Rough on Rats." It clears out rats, mice, bedbugs, roaches, vermin, flies, ants, insects.—15c. per box.

All pure, sweet laughter is a sign of happiness, and happy people are much more apt to be virtuous than unhappy. 'Be good and you will be happy,' is hardly a more valid saying than 'Be happy and you will be good.' In the matter of thought and character, it has many times been observed by the most careful students of the mind, that a lack of humor involves a very serious intellectual defect, a lack of nice discrimination.

The Bank of England was incorporated in 1649. It covers five acres of ground and employs 900 clerks. There are no windows on the streets; light is admitted through open courts; no mob could take the bank, therefore, without cannon to batter the immense walls. The clock in the center of the bank has fifty dials attached to it. Large cisterns are sunk in the court, and engines in perfect order are always in readiness in case of fire.

Death to rats, mice, roaches and ants; Parsons Exterminator. Barns, graneries, and households cleared in a single night. No fear of bad smells. Best and cheapest vermin killer in the world. Sold everywhere.

PILES! PILES!! PILES!!!

A Sure Cure Found at Last. No One Need Suffer.

A sure cure for the Blind, Bleeding, Itching and Ulcerated Piles has been discovered by Dr. Williams (an Indian remedy), called Dr. Williams' Indian Ointment. A single box has cured the worst chronic cases of 25 and 30 years standing. No one need suffer five minutes after applying this wonderful soothing medicine. Lotions, Instruments, and Electuaries do more harm than good. Williams' Ointment absorbs the tumors, allays the intense itching (particularly at night after getting warm in bed), acts as a poultice, gives instant and painless relief, and is prepared only for Piles, itching of the private parts, and nothing else.

Read what the Hon. J. M. Coffinberry, of Cleveland, says about Dr. Williams' Indian Pile Ointment: "I have used scores of pile cures, but it affords me pleasure to say that I have never found anything which gave such immediate and permanent relief as Dr. Williams' Indian Ointment."

ARTHURS' HOME MAGAZINE.

A NEW YEAR —WITH— New and Increased Attractions!

The Home Magazine occupies and has always occupied a field especially its own. While gathering for its pages from the whole range of general literature, the editor and his efficient co-laborers exercise the most careful discrimination in regard to quality and influence. Nothing is admitted which, in their view, can give false ideas of life, or weaken the bonds of virtue. No matter what may be the reputation, nor how brilliant the talents of the writer, if his moral teachings are at all questionable, they cannot find a place in our magazine. And beyond this, its publishers claim that in its peculiar character and varied departments it is more thoroughly identified with the people in their every-day life and home and social interests than any other first-class periodical.

The Home Magazine for 1882 will be the most interesting and attractive that has yet appeared.

TECUMSEH, MICH., FEB. 23, 1882.

What has become of the Tecumseh Soldiers Monument Fund? When last heard from it was securely deposited in the Peoples' Bank. Why not draw it out and invest it somewhere? Tecumseh is bound to have a soldiers' monument some of these days and if the fund now on hand could only be placed in six per cent. Adrian water bonds the accumulated interest would build a fine monument as early perhaps as the year 1900.

The water bond business has invaded the Adrian schools. Pupils mix it into their history lessons, cipher it out in their algebra problems, quarrel about it during recesses, and talk out loud about it in school hours. Recorder Stanton has gone crazy on the subject, and Dr. Rynd has admitted in private to two or three bosom friends that his faith in the saintliness of Tom Navin has been somewhat shaken.

Mayor Navin was a remarkably precise man in his official business deal. When he procured a check book from the Union Trust Co., costing one dollar, he asked for a voucher to show that the expenditure was regular and legitimate; and yet in the face of this fact, it is said that three or four of the "best citizens" of Adrian who recommended him to their fellow townsmen last spring have lost confidence in his honesty.

The events of the last few days in the local affairs of Adrian will give Ald. Willard Stearns a strong vantage ground in city affairs. But for his determined and persistent opposition, a resolution would have passed the council in December last, giving the mayor authority to negotiate $75,000 of the water bonds. His decided stand has saved the city that much money, at all events. "Honor to whom honor," and to Ald. Stearns is the honor due in this instance.

Last week the city council of Adrian passed a resolution disclaiming all right to the funds held by the Union Trust Company on the sale of the bogus water bonds. This action was duly certified to by D. A. Bixby, deputy recorder, and forwarded. But Adrian's credit has been seriously shaken in commercial circles and President King did not propose to be caught napping again, consequently he employed Judge Walker, of Detroit, to proceed to Adrian and ascertain whether Mr. Bixby had any authority to act as Recorder. Mr. Walker was in Adrian yesterday investigating this matter.

Political organs are obliged to take the confessional once in a while. The Adrian Times is now on the anxious seat asking forgiveness for having supported Navin in the mayoralty contest last spring. It says:

"Leaving off the head of the ticket the balance was not offensive then to the republicans; the trouble was the head was not left off, and the mischief was done. The right course to pursue was not entirely clear to the Times, but apprehension as to the result on the party of a refusal on its part to support a ticket that bore the endorsement of a regular nomination, decided it to give the ticket its support.

The result is deplorable the city is disgraced, and its good name tarnished by the action of this man. But the lesson, if learned, will be a valuable one."

Eating the bread of repentance in this manner must be rather humiliating, but all party organs are occasionally compelled to indulge in this kind of diet.

The latest complication in the Adrian bond swindle is the neglect, or rather the refusal, of the Council to offer a reward for Navin's arrest. The swindle is now patent to the world, the good name of the city has been disgraced, and her credit brought into contempt, her Mayor is a fugitive from justice and is probably hob-nobbing to-day with Mexican greasers, but still the Adrian city fathers are unmoved. They refuse to offer a reward for his capture. The fact that Ald. Stearns favored the proposition is probably the reason why some other aldermen opposed it. A portion of the Council had no hesitation last December to place $75,000 of water bond money in Navin's control, but they have conscientious scruples now about voting $2000 to aid in the rascal's arrest. What a marvellous exhibition of disinterested economy and municipal statesmanship.

NOTES FROM THE SOUTH.

GREENVILLE, Texas, Feb. 10th, 1882.

DEAR EDITOR:

Perhaps I owe an apology to you and the readers of your paper for obtruding myself so frequently on your notice. I am aware that much is written and published that is neither instructive nor entertaining. Well, should any one make the charge that my scribblings are open to the above [illegible] I shall at once plead guilty and throw myself on the mercy of the court.

The question is, why do so many write?

"Some write polished by physic, some by debt,
Some, for the Sunday, some because they wet
Another writes because his father writ

I write simply to pass a leisure hour away,
To be elegant or philosophical I do not essay;
'Tis pleasant, sure, to see your name in print,
And we oft write when there's nothing in it."

But all goes to make rarity and that is said to be the spice of life, and especially the spice of a newspaper. Some author has remarked that:

"Books should to one of these four ends conduce,
For wisdom, piety, delight or use."

Newspapers of to-day occupy a large space that was filled by books in times past, and so it can be said of them that they should and do conduce to the same ends that make books useful. And then they are furnished at such extremely low prices that no one can have a reasonable excuse for not taking one or more of them; and what a vast amount of useful information does a subscriber get in the course of much for so little, and even conducted one does why is it that so many do not subscribe at all, or if they do, they do it grudgingly, and in a great many instances ask the proprietor to wait from one year's end to another for his pay, and when he gently hints that he is pressed for some of the needful, he is told in a huff to stop the paper. A well conducted newspaper is one of the greatest educators of the day, and no well regulated family should be, in fact is not, without it.

But when I took my pen I did not intend to write you a lengthy letter, and I shall close by referring to something I saw in your paper a short time ago. I read the proceedings of the farmers' club, and among the transactions I noticed a committee had been appointed to select a program for the next meeting. That program contains, among other things, the following: "How to keep the boys and girls on the farm." Now that is too easy. Why don't they propose something harder than that for solution? I should smile if I couldn't answer that the first time trying. I'll volunteer to inform the farmers how to keep the boys on the farm. I could tell them how to keep the girls there too, but then it would not be fair for me to answer the whole question as that would not leave the members of the club any chance to present plans and specifications for the same. And then I understand boyology better than I do girliology, from the fact, I presume that I am a boy myself and I have run with the boys rather more than I have with the girls. The question then before the club is, "how to keep the boys on the farm?" Well just keep the girl there and I'll pledge myself to discover the North pole in less time than six months, if the boys don't stay there too, provided the girls are not the boys' sisters, and are good lookin. Why, the farmers with their club, backed up with double soled cowhide boots, double barrel shot guns and bull dogs couldn't keep the boys off the farm. TEXAS.

MRS. LYMAN'S RECIPES.

Mrs. Lyman who a short time ago gave a course of lectures in our village has given permission to publish the following recipes:

Oyster Soup.—For party of eight persons, about two quarts of oysters, or a sufficient quantity to allow about ten oysters to each person. If the oysters are not large. Strain out the juice and rinse with cold water until you have four teacups full of the liquid which you put into a sauce pan, adding salt and pepper to suit taste; white pepper is the best. Take eight teaspoonsful of butter, first rolling each teaspoonful in flour and put into the liquid. Have ready a hot tureen, in the bottom of which are eight teaspoonful of powdered crackers, wet with sixteen tablespoonsful of hot milk. Then put the oysters into the liquid in the sauce-pan and let them boil just thirty seconds. Pour the soup into the tureen over crackers and serve hot.

Fried Oysters.—Carefully dry and season each oyster and roll in finely powdered crackers. Have lard just as hot as possible, and drop in the oysters, boil five or six minutes or long enough to make them a delicate brown; serve.

Omelette.—Take four eggs, beat the yolks and whites separately, the whites to froth, remove all the crust from a good slice of light white bread, pour just enough milk over the bread to moisten it through, rub it through a sieve, add the yolks, beating all very thoroughly, and salt and pepper to taste. A little finely chopped parsley or ham may be added if desired. Melt a large tablespoonful of butter in a clean frying pan; don't let it brown, but just "sputter." Whip in very lightly your frothed whites, leave some portion of the white mixed with the yolks, pour into your omelette pan and shake gently but constantly, but do not stir. Loosen the omelette from the edge of the pan with a blunt spoon. Eight or ten minutes will generally cook it. Have ready a hot platter, and before slipping the omelette out of the pan turn one-half over the other like an old fashioned turnover. Serve at once.

Coffee.—Use a good clean coffee pot—if tin be sure that the tin is not worn off the inside, as the contact of the coffee with the iron is ruinous to the coffee. Allow one tablespoonful of ground coffee to each cup; equal parts of Mocha and Java are the best; use the white of one egg for every four or five persons; pour on one-third of the quantity required, of tepid water; and bring to a boil as soon as possible; then add the rest of the water boiling hot; after all comes to a boil, put a pinch of salt into the top of the coffee pot and shove back from the fire, as it must not boil after this. If you do not use cream serve with hot milk.

White Soup.—Boil a knuckle of veal and four calves' feet in five qts. of water, with three onions sliced, a bunch of sweet herbs, four blades of white celery cut small, a tablespoonful of whole pepper, and a tablespoonful of salt, adding five or six large blades of mace. Let it boil very slowly, till the meat is in rags and has dropped from the bone, and till the grizzle has quite dissolved. Skim it well while boiling. When done, strain it through a sieve into a tureen, or a deep white-ware pan. Next day, take off all the fat, and put the jelly (for such it ought to be) into a clean soup pot with two ounces of tapioca, and set it over the fire. When the pearl tapioca is dissolved, stir in gradually, a pint of thick cream, while the soup is quite hot; but do not let it come to a boil after the cream is in, lest it should curdle. Cut up one or two rolls in the bottom of the tureen, pour in the soup, and send it to the table.

Soup Stock.—The base of soup should always be lean, uncooked meat, to which may be added chicken, turkey, beef or mutton bones well broken up. To four pounds of lean beef (the inferior parts are quite as good for this purpose) and a knuckle of beef or veal, put five quarts of tepid soft-water. Wash the meat, and put it in the water without salt; let it come slowly to a boil; skim well, add three onions, one turnip, two carrots, four blades of celery, and a handful of sweet herbs tied up in a muslin bag; and set it back and let it simmer along for six or eight hours; two hours before straining throw in two tablespoonsful of salt; and when the meat is in rags strain into an earthen jar, let it cool and remove all the grease. This stock will keep for many days, and from it can be made all the various kinds of soup. Whatever will be added to this, such as rice, tapioca, vegetables, etc., must be cooked before being added, as much boiling injures the flavor of the stock.

Beef after the French Mode.—Four pounds of the round of beef; one-half pound fat salt pork; cut the pork into strips half inch thick; roll the strips in the following mixture: ½ teaspoonful of each of powdered sage, black pepper, summer savory, celery-salt, ½ teacupful best vinegar. Let the pork soak in the mixture for 20 minutes; remove the bone from the center of the beef and with a sharp knife pierce the beef through with holes an inch apart; draw into these holes the seasoned pork; press them down smoothly; fill up the opening from which the bone was taken with the seasoned pork; draw a band of cloth around the outside of the beef; pin it securely. Then lay in the bottom of an earthen dish some veal or beef bones; lay the meat on the bones and pour slowly over the beef two tablespoonsful of vinegar so that it may sink into the meat; lay over the top a thin slice of fat pork and add a cup of water; cut up an onion, a carrot, a few blades of celery, a bunch of sweet herbs tied up in a muslin bag; add to the meat; cover tightly, bake in a moderate oven for four hours. For the last hour baste the meat often with the juice in the dish. Most delicious.

STATEMENT UNDER OATH.

"I HAVE been afflicted for twenty years with an obstinate skin disease, called by some M. D.'s Psoriasis, and others Leprosy, commencing on my scalp, and in spite of all I could do, with the help of the most skillful doctors, it slowly but surely extended until a year ago this winter it covered my entire person in form of dry scales. For the last three years I have been unable to do any labor and suffering intensly all the time. Every morning there could be nearly a dustpanful of scales taken from the sheet on my bed, some of them half as large as the envelope containing this letter. In the latter part of the winter my skin commenced cracking open. I tried everything, almost, that could be thought of, without any relief. The 12th of June I started West, in hopes I could reach the Hot Springs. I reached Detroit, and was so low I thought I should have to go to the hospital, but finally got as far as Lansing, Mich., where I had a sister living. One Dr.——treated me about two weeks, but did me no good. All thought I had but a short time to live. I earnestly prayed to die. Cracked through the skin all over my back across my ribs, arms, hands, limbs, feet badly swollen, the nails came off, finger nails dead and hard as bone, hair dead, dry and lifeless as old straw. Oh, my God! how I did suffer!"

"My sister, Mrs. E. H. Davis, had a small part of a box of Cuticura in the house. She wouldn't give up; said, 'We will try Cuticura.' Some was applied on one hand and arm. Eureka! there was relief; stopped the terrible burning sensation from the word go. They immediately got the Cuticura Resolvent (blood purifier,) Cuticura and Cuticura Soap (the great skin cure.) I commenced by taking one tablespoonful of Resolvent three times a day after meals: had a bath once a day, water about blood heat; used Cuticura Soap freely; applied Cuticura morning and evening. Result, returned to my home in just six weeks from the time I left, and my skin as smooth as this sheet of paper."

Stanton's Mental Condition.

The physical endurance of Francis Stanton, weakened by disease and the strain on his naturally nervous temperment, by the events of the past few days, temporarily at least upset his reason and yesterday morning he was a raving maniac. The first indications were noticed by Ald. Gardner who called at the jail to see him and inquiring about his rheumatism.—Frank replied, "that will all come out in the evidence on the trial." He paced the floor nearly all Saturday night, and about 5 o'clock yesterday morning sprang from his bunk and screamed that they were pounding him to death. To the sheriff, who rushed to his room, he cried, "lock the door; don't let them pound me to death." Then he said, "Tom, you have been a good friend to me, but you have ruined me." Afterward he remarked that they were trying him without his presence, and he did not see why; he had told them all he knew about it, &c. He was taken home and Dr. Stephenson sent for, who gave him medicines and he was finally got to sleep. In the evening he was better and said he remembered it all but it seemed like some sort of dream. There is not one who can help pitying Frank Stanton, and we do not believe that Tom Navin, whose victim he is, could look upon his misery unmoved.

Adrian Times: A nine year old daughter of David Chase, Jr., of Raisin was operated upon last Saturday by Drs. Rynd and Kilpatrick for necrosis of the tibia. Several pieces of dead bone were removed, one of which was nearly four inches in length. The disease had made remarkable progress as the injury causing it had only been received about three weeks ago.

AN exchange very sensibly says that having entered a pew, move along and do not rise to let others in. If the pew has five or six already in it, do not file out in formal procession to let the poor scared woman in, but move along, and let her sit at the end next the aisle. It is not now necessary, as it once was, for the man to sit next to the aisle, ready to rush out and kill Indians.

On Thursday, the 9th, occurred the funeral of one of Franklin's oldest and most respected citizens, the Rev. John Smith, who came from England to Franklin when that township was but a wilderness, and helped lay the foundation of its prosperity. He preached the first sermon in Franklin in his own house, upon the farm now owned by Daniel Seaman. He was also father of the first white child born in that town, George Smith, now of Manchester. Deceased was a resident of Franklin nearly 40 years, and almost a life-long member of the M. E. church.

Hudson Post: There's nothing like going away from home to get the news. Leastwise one would think so concerning the diphtheria reports assiduously sent abroad to journals from this place. There has been but one death this winter from the disease in the village, and with a single exception the few cases have been very light, and the number has been growing less. Three fairly convalescent cases is all there is known now. The precautionary measures taken were prudent, and do not warrant the exaggerations and sensational reports sent abroad.

THE subject of discourse next Sunday evening by Rev. Mr. Shepard, will be Ancient Rome and Early Christianity.

THE Universalist social will meet at Mrs. A. A. Kennedy's one week from Friday next, March 3d, afternoon and evening.

MR. C. T. CHAPIN has sold the Cadillac News to J. W. Giddings. We understand that he will remain in the office as foreman.

THE tempest of Tuesday night tested the shade and fruit trees seriously. Many fine trees about the village were damaged.

JOHN R. CLARK delivers his "To and Fro in London" at the M. E. church in Raisin Valley, on Thursday, March 2d, 7:30 P. M.

THE receipts at John R. Clark's benefit last Tuesday evening were $40.85, which was very good indeed, considering the state of the weather.

REV. E. N. NICHOLS departed this life, after a long illness, on Friday last, Feb. 17th, in the 85th year of his age. Mr. Nichols had been a resident of this village over forty years, and was a pioneer of Lenawee county.—His funeral was attended at the family residence last Monday afternoon. An obituary notice will appear next week.

HAVERLY'S Mastodon Minstrels will appear at the Adrian opera house next Saturday evening, Feb. 25. This is par excellence the best minstrel troupe now traveling. We presume that many Tecumseh people will take advantage of this opportunity to attend. The Jackson train will be held provided twenty persons wish to attend from Tecumseh. Reserved seats can be procured by sending orders to Chas. Humphrey. If sufficient number wish to attend the fare will be reduced to 50 cts. for the round trip.

THE Adrian Press of last week stated that the new firm of Wolcott, Temple & Co. was a union of all the lumber firms of Tecumseh and hence there would be no competition in that line of trade. This is a mistake. We have two heavy lumber yards and planing mills here—the above firm and S. W. Temple; and there is plenty of competition between them.—What is more, both establishments are building large additions to their mills this spring. Tecumseh, for many years, has enjoyed extra facilities in this line of trade, and our lumber merchants expect a heavy increase of business during 1882.

Morenci Observer: Mr. Henry Hawley, of Medina, had a narrow escape last Monday morning, as he was one of the four passengers sleeping in the caboose of a frieght train which was telescoped by an approaching passenger train. The caboose was completely smashed up and thrown a heap of kindling wood into the adjoining ditch, and the escape of the passengers was simply marvelous. Henry reports that he kicked his way out of the debris just in time to save the others who were in the ruins, from being creamated, by extinguishing the flames that were just breaking out in the ruined car. After picking out sundry splinters from his scalp and binding up the bleeding cuticle on sundry portions of his material organisms, Henry came home rejoicing that matters were not worse.

THE BOYD—CONKLIN CASE.

This suit has become a "celebrated case" in this vicinity. Thomas Boyd, the plaintiff, in the year 1877 built a dam about 300 feet in length on his land, and along the south line of the highway to stop the flow of water from the lands above him to his farm. This dam caused the highway to overflow in times of high water. Mr. Conklin, who was highway commissioner, cut the dam open to let the water off the highway and Boyd sued him for trespass. The legal question involved was whether a lower proprietor could shut off the water which naturally flowed upon his land, back upon an upper proprietor. The case was first tried two years ago before Judge Cooley, and resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff. It was carried to the Supreme Court, which reversed the decision and remanded the case for a new trial. The second trial took place during the present term of the circuit court and was terminated last Friday by a verdict of no cause of action. The case has been very hotly contested upon both sides from the outset, and the last trial consumed two entire weeks and one day in the third week. A. L. Millard and Bean & Underwood were Mr. Boyd's attorneys, while the town of Tecumseh was represented by Judge Stacy and Willis Merritt.

Mr. Boyd may carry the case up, although we have not learned whether he intends to do so. As a matter of economy it would seem to be for the interest of both parties to let the matter drop, and have no more litigation about it. The case has already stirred up considerable bad blood between neighbors and friends. Would it not be wise policy to give the lawyers a chance now to make some money out of somebody else?

THE VILLAGE FINANCES.

We had occasion the other day to make a brief examination into the financial affairs of the village, and were agreeably surprised to find them in such excellent condition. Two years ago the village was in debt upon the Fire Engine and water works about $3,250. To-day they do not owe a dollar and there is sufficient money in the treasury to pay running expenses until the next tax shall be collected. During this time, also, the corporation has bought and paid for a large gravel bank which will last probably twenty years, at an expense of $600, and it has paid $612 for a good team, harness and wagon, to be used for village purposes. The village has already been offered $100 more for the team than it cost. The cemetery fund will owe a debt when the vault shall be completed, but that fund will take care of itself. It has always paid its own debts and will continue to do so, hence not a dollar of tax will be raised for that purpose.

The corporation team has now been owned and used a sufficient length of time to enable the Council to make an approximate estimate of its value. A few figures on this point may not be uninteresting to our village readers.—The report of the street commissioner for the past year shows that 273 days of team work have been done on the streets. The commissioner says that the present team will draw fully one-half more gravel at a load than the average team is accustomed to draw, and that one man with this team can easily draw ten loads a day. Graveling the streets can be done during every month in the year, and during an open winter like the present, this work can be done just as easily, and even more of it accomplished per day, then in sultry summer weather. Allowing one-fourth of the year for stormy weather, when a team cannot work, there remains 234 working days. If this team can draw fifty per cent. more than the average team their work would be equivalent to 351 average days' work, or 78 days' work more than were actually done the past year. It is therefore plain that the corporation team, if rightly managed, can do the entire team work of the corporation. Now let us see what the street work of the past year amounted to. Without figuring the commissioners' salary at all, the amount expended for street purposes was $1075. A good man, who will give his entire time to village work, such as shoveling snow, cleaning crossings, drawing gravel, taking care of the team, etc., can be hired for $400 and possibly less. Under the present arrangement for keeping the team it would cost $260 per year, and shoeing the horses probably $25. Here then is the account on both sides:

Expended last year on streets	$1,075
Corporation man's salary	$400
Keep of team	260
Shoeing of team	25
Amount saved	$390

Making an absolute saving to the corporation of nearly $400. And if the village should build a barn and keep their own team it would result in a saving of probably another $100 a year. Besides the advantages of owning a team above mentioned the corporation will have a team to use on the fire engine whenever necessary without one dollar extra expense.

A large amount of new sidewalks and crosswalks has been built during the year, and the walks were never in so good a condition as now.

Taken all in all the financial condition of the village at present makes a splendid showing. In fact Tecumseh is in a peculiarly fortunate condition at present in the matter of taxation. We have no water bonds outstanding, nor any other bonds.—The village is out of debt, the township is out of debt, the school district is out of debt. We doubt whether there is a village in Michigan, of equal size, in which the burdens of taxation are lighter than in Tecumseh.

Beware of Alcoholic Bitters.

Thousands have been ruined for life by drinking popular nostrums, the principal ingredient of which was alcohol. Such "bitters" are deceptive in their effects; they cause intoxication and temporary relief, while they foster the drunkard's appetite. Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" does not heat and inflame the blood; it cools and purifies it. Better than this even, it has cured many a raving appetite for drink. It will do you good, not evil, all the days of your life. All druggists sell it. Dr. David Kennedy, proprietor, Roundout, N. Y.

JOHN R. CLARK'S lecture, "To and Fro," was given last Tuesday evening according to announcement. It was probably the worst evening during the entire winter, and we were fearful the lecture would have to be postponed. A good audience however was in attendance, and it is needless to say that those present were well entertained. We hope Mr. Clark may repeat his lecture at some future time when "Old Probs" shall be in a milder mood.

ANOTHER PIONEER GONE.

Butler Holloway, a prominent citizen of the township of Raisin, after whom Holloway, on the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific R. R., was named, died at his late residence, on Friday, Feb. 17th, inst. He was born in Conway, Mass., Feb. 14, 1814. His parents emigrated to Livingston Co., N. Y., when he was about two years old. From there he came to Michigan with his father, Dr. Holloway, in the spring of 1833, and settled on the land in its wild state, upon which he lived up to the time of his death. He was a pioneer in the full sense of the term, coming upon the land in its virgin state, heavily timbered, and at a time when neighbors were few and far between. How often the one who writes this sketch has enjoyed an evening in hearing him tell of his pioneer life, how his rifle was his meat market, and except for it he would not know where to get his next meal; and other wild scenes of early life. They were times when the owls and wolves vied with each other in making music at night, the stroke of the axe its echo, the wood-pecker and the blackbirds the music by day. He was one of those noble men who, by their indomitable will and perseverance have made and kept southern Michigan what it now is. He was in every sense of the word an honorable man in all his deal. His motto was to do as he would be done by. His hands, backed by a strong constitution and a willing heart was the architect of his fortune. Economy was his watch word, liberality when good could be done, (as his magnificent gift to the Holloway depot fund will attest,) but saving the fragments until the twelve baskets were filled. A farm, and few can be said to be better, and a fine residence are monuments left to his memory. His kind sympathetic heart and obliging ways made him a friend that fills our heart with grief to part with. He was married April 24, 1846, to Ann Richards. As a father and husband his love and watchful care made him all those words mean. As a citizen he was manly, full of energy and enterprise, freely giving time and means for the public welfare. Indeed he leaves behind an example in his public spiritedness and sterling integrity, which the young will do themselves honor to imitate.

About a year previous to the time of his death, he fell upon the ice and received an internal injury which seemed to be the starting point of the disease that was in time to take him away. It commenced its work slowly but surely, and though he had so much to endear and attach him to this life, he seemed not averse to look calmly forward to that other life, and though leaving treasures in goods and hearts of friends here, he was giving convicting evidence of laying up treasures in that heavenly abode "where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal." And with a smile, as if meeting a dear friend on the other shore, passed easily and peacefully away the life of an ever to be remembered friend. N.S.

MICHIGAN PENMEN.

Don Henderson was for a long time the only man in the Tribune office that could read Greeley's copy, and he says that to learn to read Greeley's writing is a liberal education for any man.

Greeley was Don's writing master, and Don can give him points and beat him.

Schermerhorn, of the Hudson Gazette, is entirely self-educated. He ranks above them both. His writing is inscrutable.

Beal beats them all, both in the embellishment of his writing and the fertility of his orthography. The compositor who takes a course under Beal will earn a leather diploma.

And, in fact, our own Patterson is "some punkins" in this respect too.—His hand is decidedly Horatian; but there the resemblance stops very suddenly.

For our own part, our writing is so plain that the compositors stick up their noses and ask if we think they can read nothing but copper plate or script?—Ypsilanti Sentinel.

Clinton News: A lamentable tragedy occurred in Brownville on Saturday afternoon, Feb. 4th, which sacrificed the life of "Old Towser," devoted and beloved dog of C. M. Burlingame. The animal during his life of fourteen years, had acquired valuable traits of character, which especially singularize their class and endear them to the family circle; and while age seems to have, in a measure, prompted the coward who slew him, it causes a feeling of regret to know that "the kennel is empty, Towser is gone."

KNOW THYSELF

Putting Away Potatoes.

Every method has been tried by farmers to store and preserve their potatoes through the winter, and we may say until potatoes come again. It is the most valuable of all vegatables, though here and there we find a person and a writer who undertakes to tell us of its unwholesomeness. It is universally consumed in all civilized countries, as where it cannot be grown it is imported, which can be done long distances without injury, when ventilation is attended to. In storing potatoes, several methods are adopted; yet they are all practically the same, the object being to protect them from freezing, whether buried in pits or stored in cellars. The first consideration is to keep them in perfect darkness, the pit to the bins should not be too deep—not over three feet—to produce warmth and cause them to sprout. When stored in the field, straight trenches are dug, say 20 feet in length and 4 to 5 wide, which are filled to the depth of 3 feet with potatoes, then well covered with straw, on top of which put 18 to 20 inches of earth. In a pit 20 feet long there should be about three gas escapes or ventilating openings, which should be plugged with straw and covered with a board set at an angle to turn the rain. If in cellars, barns or otherwise, the bins should be covered with rugs, old carpetings, or straw. Those intending to keep for late spring sales should be frequently examined and all sprouts removed; for as soon as a potato begins to sprout it looses its solidity, dryness and quality.

Economy.

What does the word "economy" mean? Does it mean the mere laying away of money, the mere pinching of our needs and taste that we may have a fund laid by against a possible future—that, after all we may never see? Does it mean to be stingy, to refuse to give for this good object, or to assist that deserving but less fortunate neighbor? None of these; true economy is possible to the rich, as it is necessary to the poor. Economy signifies management; the regulation of affairs both domestic and public. It does not mean that the tired wife shall devote each moment of her life to hard work; by doing so she is guilty of the gravest waste. It does not mean that the father shall deny himself the newspaper, which will be rest and nourishment for his weary brain and of value to the rest of the family. It means that all members of the household shall be provided with every comfort that will help them to enjoy life in a rational manner, and thus become useful to themselves and those around them. But nothing should be wasted: the silly book purchased, the cheap and flimsy but showy garment, bought for mere fashion's sake, the superfluous article had because it was cheap; all are indications of a lack of true economy or thrift. Be careful of what you have, buy what you need and not what you want, and, above all, live within your annual income; then you will have found that economy, rightly understood, has brought you many comforts, and some luxuries.

Leaf Photographs.

A pretty amusement, especially for those who contemplate the study of botany, is the taking of leaf photographs. One very simple process is: At any druggist's get five cent's worth of bichromate of potash. Put this into a two ounce bottle of soda water. When the solution becomes thoroughly saturated—that is, the water has dissolved as much as it will—pour off some of the liquid into a shallow dish; on this float an ordinary piece of writing paper until it is thoroughly and evenly moistened. Let it become nearly dry in the dark. It should be a bright yellow. On this put a leaf, under it a piece of soft black cloth and several pieces of newspaper. Put this between two pieces of glass—all the pieces should be the same size—and with spring clothes-pins fasten them all together. Expose to a bright sun, placing the leaf so that the rays will fall on it as nearly perpendicular as possible. In a few minutes it will begin to turn brown, but it requires from half an hour to several hours to produce a good print. When it has become dark enough, take it from the frame and put it in clear water, which must be changed every few minutes till the yellow part becomes perfectly white. Sometimes the venation of the leaves will be quite distinct. By following these directions it is scarcely possible to fail, and a little practice will make perfect. The photographs, if well taken, are very pretty as well as interesting.

Storing Cabbages in Pits.

As the value of cabbages for feeding is becoming better known, this crop is more largely grown. The greatest difficulty is in preserving them. Decayed cabbages are certainly the worst possible food for a dairy cow, and the oder and taste of the milk caused by them are far more disagreeable than when turnips are fed. The successful keeping of them is therefore very important. A thousand head of well grown cabbages will furnish a full ration once a day for ten cows during at least two months by putting them, cabbages may be kept in good order for twice that length of time. The usual method of storing them in cellars is not so good as storing in pits. Pitting is done by plowing several furrows, so as to scoop out a long hollow or trench, and heaping the earth up on each side of it. The cabbages are then packed, head downwards, in the trench, and first covered with straw, then with earth sufficiently thick to keep out the frost. We have packed them without straw, and found them to keep better than with straw, as the closer the packing, so as to exclude the air more thoroughly, the better is the condition of the cabbages, the earth, too, seems to have a perservative effect; the heads being packed downwards, no earth penetrates between the leaves.

Do Not be Deceived.

In these times of quack medicine advertisements everywhere, it is truly gratifying to find one remedy that is worthy of praise, and which really does as recommended. Electric bitters we can vouch for as being a true and reliable remedy, and that will do as recommended. They invariably cure stomach and liver complaints, Diseases of the Kidneys and Urinary difficulties. We know whereof we speak, and can readily say, give them a trial. Sold at fifty cents a bottle at

The Gatling Gun.

Among the many important and valuable inventions in fire arms, of which the present century has been prolific, there is none that equals the Gatling gun in originality of design, rapidity of fire and effectiveness. The severest tests and trials, its practical use in warfare, have indisputably established its high reputation as a most formidable death-dealing weapon.

The main features of the gun may be summed up as follows: It has usually five or ten barrels, each having its corresponding lock. The barrels and locks revolve together; but in addition to this action, the locks have a forward and backward motion of their own. The forward motion places the cartridges in the chambers of the barrels and closes the breech at the time of each discharge, while the backward motion extracts the empty cartridge cases after firing. The gun can be fired only when the barrels are in motion from left to right; thus as long as the gun is revolved and fed with cartridges the several operations of loading, firing and extracting are carried on automatically, uniformly and continuously.

The gun is supplied with feed cases (containing 40 cartridges each) which fit into a hopper communicating with the chambers; as soon as one case is emptied another takes its place, and the continuous firing is kept up at a rate of over 1000 shots per minute.

We believe the Gatling is the only fire arm in the world in which the three sets of parts, namely, barrels, locks and inner breech all revolve simultaneously, enabling the gun to be loaded and fired rapidly and continuously, while under revolution, and without producing recoil to destroy its accuracy.

That the gun is simple and durable is evinced by the fact that 100,000 cartridges have been fired from it without injury to any of its parts. The gun has, recently been greatly improved, and also its ammunition, so that now its rate of fire is over 1000 shots per minute.—Scientific American.

An eccentric Englishman, a candidate for Parliament, at a recent meeting of his constituents, was asked by a man in the crowd: "How about the Liquor Bill?" "Well," said the candidate, "Mine was uncommonly high last year. How was yours?"

A little girl at Chambersburg (Pa.) was called upon in a Sunday-school to say a text from the Scriptures. When the time came she had forgotten her verse, but from the general knowledge of Holy Writ she solemnly quoted: "Little children should be seen and not heard."

The only pun Abe Lincoln ever made was when he was splitting rails and his boss criticised his work severely. "How do you feel now?" asked a fellow workman. He thought a moment and replied: "I feel that I maul right." It is believed that this was what started his Presidential boom.

A lady, not accustomed to raising poultry, set a hen on some eggs, and in due course of time a brood of chickens was hatched. A friend, coming in four days afterward, noticing that the little things looked quite weak and puny, asked how often they were fed. "Fed!" was the reply, "why I thought the hen nursed them."

When the Scotch Professor Aytoun was courting the daughter of Professor Wilson, ("Christopher North,") he told her he disliked to mention the subject to her father. She therefore went to the old man herself, asking: "Shall I accept his offer, papa? He says he is too diffident to name the subject to you himself." "Then," said old Christopher, "I had better write my reply and pin it to your back." He did so, and the answer was, "With the author's compliments."

Long ago, during the Millerite fever, when ascension robes were in order, and all were listening for chariot wheels, a good couple had retired one night—the man somewhat visionary, but his wife practical enough. In the ebb of a mid-winter night he woke, hearing a slight noise, and gently nudged his sleeping partner: "Wife, I hear the chariot wheels coming." "Lie still John, you old fool. The Lord would not come on wheels, with such good sleighing."

One day last week a policeman saw a young man sitting on a dry goods box with his head tied up and one arm in a sling. Some of his ear was gone, and his nose needed sending to a repair shop. "Did a loaded wagon run over you?" asked the policeman. "No; we were only celebrating my birthday last night. We had a glorious time. You ought to have been there." The policeman merely said that judging by the looks of the celebrant the whole force ought to have been there.

Trees and Health.

Everybody knows that trees take the carbonic acid thrown out in the breath of men and animals, separate it into component parts—carbon and oxygen—give back the latter to be used over again, and work up the former into wood and fruits.

It is also coming to be generally understood that forest trees do important service in promoting rainfalls, and in helping to retain the surface-water for springs, streams and general use.

It is also known that certain species, planted in malarial localities, help to render the latter healthy by somehow using up the deadly miasma.

It would now appear that trees growing near drains carry off the sewerage water.

A gentleman, whose cess drain was constructed just like his neighbors' and in the same kind of soil, had found it unnecessary to clean it out, while the others had to be cleaned out frequently.

An examination showed that three large trees, whose roots had penetrated into the vicinity of his second, or waste cess-pool, were clearly channels through which the waste all escaped.

Whether it was changed into plant-food, as is likely, or was exhaled through the leaves, in either case it was disposed of with equal safety.

Tecumseh, Mich., June 28, 1881.

H. H. WARNER & Co. Sirs, I had been troubled with a severe case of kidney difficulty for three or four years and was breaking my rest, having to get up many times during the night. I had read of some of the cures from the use of your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, and after using four bottles my trouble has disappeared. I am only too glad to express my gratitude and recommend your medicine to all.

J. P. Slayton

Tecumseh, Mich., June 28, 1881.

H. H. WARNER & Co. Sirs, I having been troubled with disease of the kidneys and liver for the past two years was induced to try your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, and after the use of one bottle was afforded great relief. I recommend its use to all persons similarly afflicted.

John L. Evans

Thousands of equally strong endorsements—many of them in cases where hope was abandoned—have been voluntarily given, showing the remarkable power of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, in all diseases of the kidneys, liver and urinary organs. If any one who reads this has any physical trouble, remember the great danger of delay.

WHO IS UNACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THIS COUNTRY, WILL SEE BY EXAMINING THIS MAP, THAT THE

is The Great Connecting Link between the East and the West

Its main line runs from Chicago to Council Bluffs, passing through Joliet, Ottawa, La Salle, Geneseo, Moline, Rock Island, Davenport, West Liberty, Iowa City, Marengo, Brooklyn, Grinnell, Des Moines (the capital of Iowa), Stuart, Atlantic, and Avoca: with branches from Burcan Junction to Peoria; Wilton Junction to Muscatine, Washington, Fairfield, Eldon, Belknap, Centreville, Princeton, Trenton, Gallatin, Camden, Leavenworth, Atchison, and Kansas City; Washington to Sigourney, Oskaloosa, and Knoxville; Keokuk to Farmington, Bonaparte, Bentonsport, Independence, Eldon, Ottumwa, Eddyville, Oskaloosa, Pella, Monroe, and Des Moines; Mt. Zion to Keosauqua; Newton to Monroe; Des Moines to Indianola and Winterset; Atlantic to Griswold and Audubon; and Avoca to Harlan and Carson. This is positively the only Railroad, which owns, and operates a through line from Chicago into the State of Kansas.

Through Express Passenger Trains, with Pullman Palace Cars attached, are run each way daily between CHICAGO and PEORIA, KANSAS CITY, COUNCIL BLUFFS, LEAVENWORTH and ATCHISON. Through cars are also run between Milwaukee and Kansas City, via the "Milwaukee and Rock Island Short Line."

What will please you most will be the pleasure of enjoying your meals, while passing over the beautiful prairies of Illinois and Iowa, in one of our magnificent Dining Cars that accompany all Through Express Trains. You get an entire meal, as good as is served in any first-class hotel, for seventy-five cents.

Appreciating the fact that a majority of the people prefer separate apartments for different purposes (and the immense passenger business of this line warranting it), we are pleased to announce that this Company runs Pullman Palace Sleeping Cars for sleeping purposes, and Palace Dining Cars for eating purposes only. One other great feature of our Palace Cars is a SMOKING SALOON where you can enjoy your "Havana" at all hours of the day.

Magnificent Iron Bridges span the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers at all points crossed by this line, and transfers are avoided at Council Bluffs, Kansas City, Leavenworth and Atchison, connections being made in Union Depots.

DR. A. TRASK'S
OINTMENT.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.
It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.
The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.
ALL SORES, CUTS, BRUISES, SPRAINS, BURNS, SORE THROAT, LAMENESS, RHEUMATISM, PILES, INFLAMMATION of LUNGS and BOWELS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, SALT RHEUM, CHILBLAINS, AFFECTIONS of the SPINE, ERYSIPELAS, NERVOUS IRRITATION, and all disorders attendant with INFLAMMATION.
It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve, and ligament is searched, and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years
The ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its virtues is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have suffered this ointment to frankly state their experience with it to their living friends. If but one in a hundred would do this, we should feel perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.
Price 25 and 40 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.
D. RANSOM SON & CO., Prop'rs, Buffalo, New York.

The severe weather and shifting winds of the present season have led to all kinds of exposure, so that few healthy, we venture to say, escape the visitation of an attack of COLDS, COUGHS, BRONCHITIS, PLEURISY, or symptoms of Pulmonary Consumption, which demand prompt attention to ends in CONSUMPTION.
Town's BRONCHIAL SYRUP is a POSITIVE CURE. With but the nominal cost of 25 cents you procure this truly sovereign remedy.
BRONCHIAL SYRUP is guaranteed by all druggists and dealers in medicine to give SATISFACTION. Try it and be convinced of its GREAT MERIT.
MARCEAUS LIVER and Anti-Bilious COMPOUND cures all Liver and bilious diseases, purifies the blood, equalizes the circulation and restores to perfect health the enfeebled system.

How to Peel Onions.

She came on board as pretty as a daisy, and as sweet and fresh as an elegant get-up could make her. There was a chattering aft on the yacht as to what they would have for dinner, and it was agreed for fun that as it was chowder, each one was to do something towards the same. "You have got to peel and chop up them onions," says a dandy kind of a fellow to the pretty girl. "Agreed," says she, not wincing a bit, and they all laughed and pitied her. When the time came for fixing up things, kind of urged to it, I brought that pretty girl a peck of the finest onions—real red-skin ones—you ever smelled. "There is going to be a lot of crying," thinks I. "If that would be the only sorrow in her life!" Says she to me: "Mr. Robert do you haul me a bucket of water," and I did it. "Now, just put them onions in that there water," and I did it. Then she took off her white fingers a lot of rings and put them in her pocket, and asked for a knife, and the onions being in the water, she peeled and sliced them under water, and nary a tear came, nor nothing. "Now," says she, holding out the tips of her pretty fingers, "who will be gallant enough to kiss these?" Seeing I was cook, I didn't like to be so bold, but there was a half-dozen of the men who rushed forward, and of course I had no chance. That's the way I learned how ladies can peel onions and not cry over them.—From "Bob, the Sea-Cook."

A Milkman's Mathematics.

When Thomas drove up to the house on Elizabeth street the other day, to deliver the usual quart of mixture, the gentleman of the house kindly inquired:

"Thomas, how many quarts of milk do you deliver now?"

"Ninety-one, sir."

"How many cows have you?"

Nine, sir."

The gentleman made some remarks about the early spring, state of the roads, etc., and then asked:

"Say, Thomas, how much milk per day do your cows average?"

"Seven quarts, sir."

"Ah—um," said the gentleman, as he moved off.

Thomas looked after him, scratched his head, and all at once grew pale as he pulled out a short pencil and began to figure on the wagon cover.

"Nine cows is nine, and I set seven quarts down under the cows and multiply. That's sixty-three quarts of milk. I told him I sold ninety-one quarts per day. Sixty-three from ninety-one leaves twenty-eight, and none to carry. Now, where do I get the rest of the milk? I'll be hanged if I haven't given myself dead away to one of my best customers by leaving a durned big cavity in these figures to be filled with water!"

Capturing Ostriches.

The greatest feat of an Arab hunter is to capture an ostrich. Being very shy and cautious, and living on the sandy plains, where there is little chance to take it by surprise, it can be captured only by a well-planned and long-continued pursuit on the swiftest horse. The ostrich has two curious habits in running when alarmed. It always starts with outspread wings against the wind, so that it can scent the approach of an enemy. Its sense of smell is so keen that it can detect a person at a great distance long before he can be seen. The other curious habit is that of running in a circle. Usually five or six ostriches are found in company. When discovered, part of the hunters, mounted on fleet horses will pursue the birds, while the other hunters will gallop away at right angles to the course the ostriches have taken. When these hunters think they have gone far enough to cross the paths the birds will be likely to take, they watch upon some rise of ground for their approach. If the hunters hit the right place and see the ostriches, they at once start in pursuit with fresh horses, and sometimes they overtake one or two of the birds, but often one or two of the fleet horses fall completely tired out with so sharp a chase.

Bad Butter.

In a lecture before the New York State Agricultural Society, Hon. L. E. Lewis said: "In my opinion a great amount of butter is spoiled, first, by uncleanliness in manufacture; second, by too much acid in the cream; third, by caseine in a decomposed state of butter; fourth, by too much friction on butter in churning and working. Foul milk stables, impure water, odors from decomposed matter, all effect the quality of milk. There is over a pound more sugar in 100 pounds of milk than there is of butter. Sugar acid is the first sign of decomposition in the milk. It destroys the sugar. The second, or lactic acid, acts upon and destroys the oils that give butter its fine aroma. When these two acids are fully developed, destroying the sugar and aromatic properties, we have what may be called the natural oleomargarime butter. It is scarcely better than the patent article. Cream should be churned while in the first or second sugar acid. The best is made from sweet cream, but that made from sweet cream is more susceptible to odors than sour cream butter

He who wishes to secure the good of others has already secured his own.

Children furnish more than one-half of the world's purest joys, their beautiful deeds breaking in upon us oftentimes as delightful surprises; and stupid would we be if we failed to be roused from life's torpor by their presence, their needs and their expression of them.

Happiness is a frail plant which seldom lives long on earth. It springs up when it will; often in quiet, shady nooks and corners, seldom in cultivated gardens. It often blooms where one would least expect it, and then, as they expectedly dies.

The white of an egg is said to be a specific for fish-bones sticking in the throat. It is to be swallowed raw. Remember it.

A BRAVE LADY.

(From the Courier.)

Mrs. Schomacker, of Creek Locks, Ulster Co., N. Y., had the misfortune to entirely lose the sight of one of her eyes through an accident, and endured painful inflammatory action therein for two long years; the other eye finally becoming sympathetically affected, her general health seriously suffering. Indeed, she was a mere wreck a walking skeleton. In this terrible she consulted Dr. David Kennedy, of Roundout, N. Y., who told her at once that the injured eye must be removed. She quietly but firmly said: "All right Doctor, but don't give me chloroform. Let my husband sit by my side during the operation and I will neither cry out or stir." The work was done, and the poor woman kept her word. Talk of soldierly courage! This showed greater pluck than it takes to face a hundred guns. To restore her general health and give nerve and strength to the system, Dr. Kennedy then gave the "Favorite Remedy," which cleansed the blood and imparted new life to the long suffering woman. She rapidly gained health and strength, and now says the "Favorite Remedy" is a priceless blessing to women. No family should be without it. Your druggist has it. If not send to Dr. David Kennedy, Roundout, New York.

Clark all those tracts or parcels of land situate in the township of Hudson in the county of Lenawee and state of Michigan, bounded and described as follows, to wit: "Being village lot number five (5) on Laird's addition to the village of Hudson, being situated on section nineteen in said township of Hudson. Also one other piece or parcel of land situate in the village of Hudson, county of Lenawee, and state of Michigan, described as situated on section nineteen in said township, commencing on the north line of land deeded by Ann B. Cobb to Robert Laird, and sixteen rods west of the west division of fractions on said section nineteen and running thence northerly and parallel with the line of fractions till it strikes the southern angle line of land deeded by Harvey Cobb to David Pratt, and running thence westerly on said Pratt's new line [illegible] east line of land now owned by John W. House, thence southerly till it reaches the northeast corner of said Pierce's lot; thence westerly on the south line of said Pierce's lot to a point four rods west of the line first above described and mentioned as a part of the boundary; thence southerly on a line parallel with the first described line to the north line of Robert Laird's land, at a point four rods west of the place of beginning; thence easterly on said Laird's north line to the place of beginning, to secure the payment of one hundred and twenty-two dollars and the interest accrue thereon. Said mortgage was, on the 23d day of April, 1855, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, for Lenawee county, in Liber U of mortgages, on folios 276, 277 and 278. This mortgage was, on the 25th day of October, 1867, duly assigned by said Elihu L. Clark to John P. Osborn, which assignment was on the 25th day of October, 1867, duly recorded in said Register's office in Liber 50 of mortgages, on pages 768 and 769. Default has been made in the conditions of said mortgage by the non-payment of the moneys due thereon by which the power of sale therein contained has become operative. There is now claimed to be due and unpaid on said mortgage the sum of two hundred and fourteen and seventy-five hundredths dollars, and no proceeding has been instituted at law or in equity to recover said sum or any part thereof. CONGRESSIONAL.

SENATE.

FEB. 14.—In the senate the motion of Mr. Edmunds to take up the anti-polygamy bill out of its regular order was defeated—yeas, 21; nays, 29—and consideration of the calendar proceeded with.

Upon the expiration of the morning hour the pension arrears resolution came up. Mr. Edmunds again moved to proceed with the anti-polygamy bill, but said he would not ask a vote on the motion until several senators who had given notice of set speeches on other subjects to-day had been heard. Unfinished business was then informally laid aside and Mr. Slater spoke upon the importance of the commerce of the northwest, and of the improvement of Columbia river.

At 2:50 p. m. the privileged morning hour was now having been finished, the calendar was taken up in regular order of business, under the rule, and the senate continued until 1:00 o'clock. Mr. Vance made a speech on the tariff commission bill. He declared that reduction in revenue was the object of the south, and said it was the legislation of Mess. Tarpin and Stevens, stimulated by Jay Gould in the halls of congress, instead of an Hancock's election. Mr. Vance spoke until 4:20.

Mr. Edmunds on 24 for the yeas and nays on his motion to go into executive session, saying he wanted to again test the sentiment of the senate in regard to the immediate consideration of the Utah bill. The motion was lost by a vote of 18 to 29.

The polygamy bill was then called up and given precedence of other business. Mr. Edmunds referred to the importance of the measure, and said he would ask the senate to dispose of it to-morrow. Adjourned at 4:40 p. m.

FEB. 15.—In the senate the anti-polygamy bill was taken up. Several important amendments and additional sections, providing that any man cohabiting with more than one woman shall be fined to the extent of $500 and imprisoned six months, or both, at the discretion of court for each offense, were agreed to. Section 5 authorizes the president to grant amnesty to offenders prior to the passage of the act on such conditions and under such limitations as he shall deem proper.

Mr. Hoar contended that congress had no power to confer such power.

Mr. Edmunds said it was an intricate subject, but the section was drawn specifically and technically from English jurisprudence. He said the power of the president to grant conditional pardon had passed beyond the range of ordinary discussion.

Mr. Bayard said no action of Congress could enlarge or diminish the pardoning power of the president, and the section was evidently a suggestion that there was no disposition to prosecute or persecute for anything that had happened in the past. After remarks by Hoar and Garland, the section was agreed to.

A long debate arose on the last section, which declares all the registration and election offices of the territory vacant, and confers power on a commission of five, to cause the registrations and issue certificates of election to eligible persons.

Mr. Call urged that the power conferred on this commission was unconstitutional, dangerous, and in defiance of the popular will.

Mr. Edmunds said that the territories of the United States were under the legislative power of the government. The section was framed so as to put political power in Utah into the hands of persons obedient to law, and not into the hands of a hierarchy of polygamists who did not recognize the law; in other words, to reorganize the territory.

Mr. Bayard pointed out that the system of the so-called theocracy had displaced republican principles in Utah, and it was necessary for the maintenance of those principles that the system should be displaced. That could be done by annihilating all statutory and other government of the territory.

Mr. West fully concurred in the philippic against the system of government in Utah, which was a disgrace to the country. He was in favor of sending the people of Utah back to the condition of the people of the other territories, and of giving them a territorial government.

Mr. Hoar said the system of government in Utah was not a territorial government in the sense in which the term was used in the case of other territories. It was a military despotism, established by the president, and continued by congress. He was in favor of sending the people

The red ribbon club met as usual last Saturday night, but for some reason there was not much of a program presented, although P. S. McKinnon of Tecumseh gave a very interesting address. Ira Gray, Gene Gray, Palmer Gould, Lewis Kellogg and their families, with several others started for Florida last Monday to locate homes. They chartered two cars through, one to be used as a dwelling, the other a store room. Uncle Horace Gray has been down there all winter farming and has new potatoes now.

Mrs. Emery, of Lansing, lectured at Lake Ridge Hall on the evening of Feb. 14. Subject Anti-Monopoly. The lecture was very able and eloquent and gave general satisfaction.

The city of Adrian has the sympathy of everybody in her late kidney trouble which came so very near terminating in "Bright's disease." But how absurd to suppose that Tom will come back of his own accord as apparently feared by some of the council. You bet that Dick and Charley will offer no reward unless the city leads off.

The event of the week was the wedding at Joseph Mellon's Feb. 21, when their daughter Miss Nancy Mellon, of Macon, and Mr. Hugh Ager, of Livingston co., N. Y., were made one, the Rev. J. H. Kershow officiating. The inclement weather and terrible condition of the roads prevented those invited from a distance from attending, still the attendance was good, and the hospitality served by the hostess, bountiful. Those present manifested their congratulations in part by the following testimonials:

Mr. & Mrs. Jos. Mellon, scarf, set silver teaspoons, and [illegible]; Miss Sarah Mellon, two table spreads; Miss Mary Mellon, six napkins; Mr. & Mrs. J. G. Boyd, set glassware; Mr. & Mrs. J. Mooney, six goblets; Mr. & Mrs. Thos. Butler, table cloth; Mr. & Mrs. Jno. Wiggins, stand spread and pin cushion; Mr. & Mrs. Jas. McCarbery, silver teapot; Mr. & Mrs. B. S. Boyce, sugar spoon; Sam. Steel, gold pen; Joe. Mellon, jr., Sam. Stewart, Albert Brown, each a silver dollar.

The list of presents from those not present was rare and numerous, but these we are not prepared to give. The newly married couple took the 11 o'clock at Britton, next day for their home in N. Y., with best wishes of friends and associates.

CLINTON.

Miss Carl Covey, of Paw Paw, arrived here Tuesday morning. She intends to spend about two weeks visiting her old friends.

Mrs. Fred Kilby and Mrs. James Wells are visiting Mrs. Geo. A. Kies, of Tecumseh, this week.

The M. E. social was held Wednesday afternoon at Mrs. E. F. Muir's.—It was a very pleasant affair.

Mr. and Mrs. Ruel Mills and Mr. and Mrs. Henderson were guests at the residence of E. R. Smith over Sunday.

Only two persons in this vicinity have as yet been afflicted with measles. They are improving.

Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Whittlesey have left their boarding place at Mrs. Pomeroy's and set up an establishment for themselves in the house owned by G. W. Lewis.

Oscar Palmer arrived here last Friday with a fine lot of horses he had purchased in Ohio. They were taken to E. G. Cook's barn. "Oc" is a good judge of horses and brings none but the best. Several have already been sold.

The temperance lectures held here last week were well attended and a good many signed the pledge of total abstinence and prohibition. The children's meeting Sunday afternoon was highly successful, over one hundred and twenty names to the pledge against liquor, tobacco and profanity. Mr. Woodford is an earnest worker in this cause and his eloquence combined with his earnestness seldom fails to stir the hearts of his listeners and wake them to a more thorough knowledge of this growing evil.

A sufferer from the Michigan fire has been in town several days trying to raise sympathy and money for himself and friends. He receives plenty of the former, but as he has no references and is a stranger to every one the citizens are a little chary of showering funds too freely upon him.

Longfellow's seventy-fifth birthday was observed in the Union school Monday afternoon with quite an extensive program. The exercises were very interesting and many visitors were present. The presence of parents and friends in the school now and then is encouraging to teachers and pupils alike. Each department in the building was represented, and, though all did well, one could not fail to detect the error common to most schools—the neglect of reading in the higher grades. After scholars have left the grammer department that study it would seem had been forgotten, while teachers in the lower department seem to have made it a specialty. The art of reading is a very essential requirement and is of as much practical use as any other study. It should demand more attention.

Good For The Women.

Many ladies suffer from an extreme nervous, semi-hysterical condition.—They have disturbing dreams, exciting muscular startings, peculiar painful symptoms of nightmare. They lie awake and suffer the brain to be flighty when that weary organ ought, according to nature, to be asleep.—Brown's Iron Bitters give sweet repose and quickly remove all such nervous disorders.—Home Physician.

RIDGEWAY.

Miss [illegible] Lang[illegible] has been visiting her sister, Mrs. Lucking in Detroit.

Samuel Gibson and Hannah Wiggins have launched their canoe on the sea of matrimony.

G. P. Waring is attending the extra session, while A. Sutton looks after the new lumber yard for him.

Robert Houseman was called to St. John last Saturday to attend his father who was severely injured while falling a tree.

In one week more our village school will close. We understand Prof. Raymond will go into another line of business. He could certainly succeed as an auctioneer.

We are informed that Miss Jennie Kilpatrick has been engaged for another term at the pickerel hill school. This speaks well for her ability, as well as for the farsightedness (?) of the director.

Misses Robie and Allie Arner spent last Sunday in Milan.

Mr. Conklin of Dundee township has become a citizen of this village, occupying the house formerly occupied by Mrs. Polly Linn.

Mr. & Mrs. Henry Barnaby of Grand Rapids spent part of last week visiting friends here.

The donation at the Christian church last week netted about $50.

Ed. Pilbeam has a new house well under way at Britton. We hear that Wm. Prindell will soon follow suit.

What has become of the scheme to connect the village and station by telephone or telegraph. Such a line would have been a big thing during this muddy winter.

The peanut social at the M. E. church last Friday evening was well attended. The ladies appeared arrayed in peanut jewelry, in the get up of which considerable ingenuity and white thread were displayed. We believe, however, the cake was awarded to Dr. Nelson for the gorgeous watch chain sported by him. Mr. Wickham also wore diamonds of the peanut. At the close of the evening several "long ladies" chains were sold at Auction at a good profit to the society.

HOME MAGAZINE.

A NEW YEAR

—WITH—

New and Increased Attractions!

The Home Magazine occupies, and has always occupied a field especially its own. While gathering for its pages from the whole range of general literature, the editor and his efficient co-laborers exercise the most careful discrimination in regard to quality and influence. Nothing is admitted which, in their view, can give false ideas of life, or weaken the bonds of virtue. No matter what may be the reputation, nor how brilliant the talents of the writer, if his moral teachings are at all questionable, they can not find a place in our magazine.—And beyond this, its publishers claim that in its peculiar character and varied departments it is more thoroughly identified with the people in their every-day life and home and social interests than any other first-class periodical.

Kidney Disease Cured.

Christianburg, Va., 1881.

Suffering from kidney diseases, from which I could get no relief either from medicine or the prominent physicians of our country, I tried Brown's Iron Bitters, which cured me completely. A child of mine recovering from scarlet fever, had no appetite, and did not seem to be able to eat at all. I gave him Iron Bitters with the happiest results. J. Kyle Montague.

THE LILY.

A maiden said to a lily,
"I go to the dance to-night;
Will thou nestle among my tresses,
O lily, so pure and white?"
But the lily answered: "O, maiden,
I should droop in the heat and glare,
And die in thy shining ringlets;
Place the glowing coronation there."

A bride saw the lily blooming:
"I go to the altar to-day:
In my bridal garland, sweet lily,
I will twine thy pale, beautiful spray."
Why sadden thy bridal, lady,
By wearing my cold, white flowers?
Sweet roses and orange-blossoms
Should gladden thy joyous hours."

"In thy bridal beauty rare,
Then shalt thou be to my dead child's bloom
As parsley the grave in there."
"O, mourning, sorrowful mother
Thou hast seen one blossom fade,
On the shroud, on the broken lily,
Is a wreath of immortelles laid."

A young girl whispered: "O, lily,
Let me place this on my breast,
For the sweet Lord Jesus cometh
To-day in my heart to rest."
And the lily answered: "Yes, maiden,
On thy heart let my blossoms be,
That my pure white petals may whisper
Near the Lord of purity."

ON THE THRESHOLD.

"Dying?" Yes, they tell me so,
Well, 'tis something just to know
This fierce pain must soon forego
Its envenomed dart.
Bound no longer in Time's thrall,
Deaf at last to Sorrow's call,
God's own peace shall softly fall
On my tired heart.

"Lonely?" It may be I miss
Something, in an hour like this,
Which might tremble in a kiss,
Oft lips silent grown;
But the truest love, if nigh,
Could not whisper, "Sweet, good-bye!"
Standing on the shore, while I
Drift away—alone.

"Frightened?" What is there to fear?
Through the solemn dark I hear
Sweet sounds falling: "Be of cheer—
God thy step shall keep."
Take away the lights, and let
No one come, with vain regret,
My soul's calm to grieve and fret.
Hush and let me sleep!

ANSON GREY.

Anson Grey was a still, stern man at thirty, shut up within himself and by himself, in his great stone mansion on the hill, and people knew no more about him than they knew about the dead. His early years had been passed abroad, where, or how, nobody knew and most had ceased to care, for that matter; the last two had been passed in Burlingame.

A brilliant light at night, shining from great east windows, and occasional ps through the town, by day, were the only tokens of his presence. However a change was coming and that without warning. Anson Grey fell sick, suddenly and dangerously so. The village docter was summoned, who in turn telegraphed for another from the neighboring city in hot haste, and together, they said in whispers, that their patient would probably die. There was no woman in the great house to act as nurse, and the head servant, obeying doubtless his master's orders, refused to allow one there as yet.

How it came about was a mystery, but one morning, when the master had laid a week half senseless, an unusual cloud of dust was observed whirling up the hill, and emerging therefrom was a carriage, splashed and weather-stained, headed by two straining, panting horses, who came up to the entrance as if driven by the evil one. A lady, tall and fair as sunlight, pushed open the carriage door impatiently and sprang out. With a hasty glance around she hurried up the steps, entered the drawing-room and stood before the two astonished gentlemen who were seated there.

"Is Anson Grey alive?"

"Yes, but he grows worse."

Before they divined her intention, she had passed them, and was in the next room bending over the sick man.

"The devil will be to pay if she excites him now," the elder one said, "If some good nurse had come, it might have been of some use; but this dainty thing—bah!"

She came out in a moment, her face white but determined.

"Will you be kind enough to send for a minister and remain until he comes?" she asked, as she began to remove her things.

There was something in her manner that forbade questioning, and they obeyed her like so many dumb men, as they said afterward.

The minister did come; William Skinner, the head servant was called, and after the three held a private conference, which seemed to be satisfactory, they come out and, to the amazement of all, the lady stood beside Anson Grey and the marriage vows were taken.

The wise doctors were mistaken in their estimate of their unknown. She though sorely against her will.

A sweet and wondrously fair face much admired and sought after, Anson Grey had half a mind to enter the lists with the others, but something kept him back, and he only exchanged a few words with her now and then.

There happened to come a heavy, two days' flood, and the first night of it Edith sent a servant asking Mr. Grey to come to a private parlor for a moment. He obeyed the summons with alacrity, wondering much what could be coming now.

Edith was waiting for him, cloaked and hooded, and evidently in haste to be off somewhere.

"I hope you will pardon me," she said, as she closed the door behind him, "but really I did not know whom to ask and mamma will not allow me to go by myself. A poor woman down on the beach is sick, perhaps dying, and I must go to see her. Her little boy just came after me. I was there yesterday and they are in great distress. Could I trouble you to go with me?"

"I will do your errand. It is too stormy for you to venture out."

"Oh, it is no errand. I am sorry to trouble anybody."

Mr. Grey saw what was wanted, and saying he would be back directly, vanished for his rubber suit.

The rain drove into their faces, and the wind howled through the dark night like the minister of a thousand storms—not for a poor fisherwoman, perhaps, but for one as good as fair Edith Willoughby, he should not have hesitated a moment. When they came upon the beach the waves fairly leaped into their faces, and Edith shivered and clung half terrified to her companion in spite of herself.

"[illegible] and better [illegible] now, and leave it to me," he said.

"No, we are almost there. I should never forgive myself if I did," she answered, catching her breath as she spoke. "It is only you I am worried about." "I am glad to be able to help you," he said. And I think he spoke the truth.

Inside the cottage poor Grace Pooley lay on her hard bed trying to breathe on a little longer, if so the good God might send some good friends before she died, to care for her orphan boy.

When the door opened her eyes brightened, and she raised up a little.

"The Lord bless ye for coming. I know He will," she said as Edith threw off her wet covering and went toward her.

"This is only one of the boarders who came with me," she said in reply to the woman's questioning look. "I should have come to-day had I known that you were worse."

She sat down beside the bed, and Anson Grey watched her as she spoke in a low, tender voice to the grateful woman. Among the words which he could distinguish was a promise to see to Jamie; and when the old woman who seemed to be nurse came up to administer something, and in a half whisper asked Edith to pray with them, he began to think he was in another world. And it was another to him truly. Surely she would never do that. But she did. Kneeling upon the bare floor, clasping her white hands, she sent up such a prayer for help and strength as Anson Grey had never dreamed of hearing before.

After that night Anson Grey knew where his heart was, but for his life he dared not approach Edith. She seemed an immeasurable distance from such as he, but he cherished the memory of her prayers as the one glimpse into heaven for which he should thank God all his life.

Edith's mother was a gay woman, and such she meant her daughter to be, though for her life she could not keep her from ferreting out and helping also, an innumerable number of forlorn, poverty stricken people who had no earthly claim upon her, as they went their fashionable rounds. It was mortifying, even exasperating, but she was powerless to prevent it. They were to be off again soon, Anson Grey heard; but he would have missed seeing her had he not accidently met her as she was hurrying up the beach toward their boarding house on the very day they left. He could not let her go without telling her what was in his heart.

"May I speak to you a moment?" he said abruptly stopping her.

"Certainly."

"Oh, not that, Mr. Grey!"

Somehow he took courage from the quick paling of her lips.

"Yes that I love you and want you for my wife."

"I am to be married Christmas."

He turned and was leaving her, when something made her speak.

"Mr. Grey."

He faced her again and she saw how white and stern he looked.

"Had I been free you would not have asked in vain."

For days and weeks afterward, Anson Grey hugged the memory of her look, as she said those blessed words, to his heart, caring more for that than for the love and caresses of any other.

Christmas came, but death came with it, and Edith's lover went his long journey, leaving his affianced bride and her scheming mother to console themselves as best they might.

In a way mysterious to all save William Skinner, Edith heard of Anson Grey's illness, and, as we have seen, went to him and had the courage to become his wife.

The people of Burlingame learned to love the gentle mistress of the old stone mansion on the hill, and never a suffering one called for help in vain, as long as "my lady," as they called her, was mistress there.

Beware of Alcoholic Bitters.

Thousands have been ruined for life by drinking popular nostrums, the principal ingredient of which was alcohol. Such "bitters" are deceptive in their effects; they cause intoxication and temporary relief, while they foster the drunkard's appetite. Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" does not heat and inflame the blood; it cools and purifies it. Better than this even, it has cured many a raving appetite for drink. It will do you good, not evil, all the days of your life. All druggists sell it. Dr. David Kennedy, proprietor, Roundout, N. Y.

There is a pretty tradition at Venice, handed down among the inhabitants of the Lagoons, which says that a sailor brought home to his betrothed a branch of the delicate coralline known as "mermaid's lace." The girl, a worker in points, attracted by the grace of the coral, imitated it with her needle, and after much toil, produced the exquisite fabric which as "Venice Point," soon became the mode in all Europe. Lace-making in Italy formed the occupation of many women of the higher classes who wished to add to their incomes. Each lady had a number af workers, to whom she supplied patterns, pricked by herself, paying her workwomen at the end of every week, each day being notched on a tally. In the convent of Jesu Bambino, at Rome, curious specimens of old conventual work—parchment patterns with lace in progress—have been found. They belonged to Spanish nuns, who long ago taught the art of lace-making to novices. Like all point lace, this appears to be executed in separate pieces, given out by the nuns, and then joined together by a skillful hand. We see the pattern traced, the work partly finished, and the very thread left, as when "Sister Felice Vittoria" laid down her work centuries ago.

Bioplasm.

Among the recent discoveries in science, none perhaps, will prove of more utility to man than those relating to bioplasm, because they throw light on physiological questions, particularly those concerning the construction and nutrition of the body and the causes of disease. It was formerly supposed that our bodies were alive from top to toe, inside and out; but this is found to be a mistake. Only about one-fifth part is alive; the rest is formed material. Everybody knows that a tree may become so hollow that only a shell is left; yet the tree may grow And mature buds and leaves and fruit. It is because the outside [illegible] alive, the wood is non-living; it is simply formed material. Now the body is not like a tree—alive only on the outside; but the living portion and the formed material exist together in every part—in every tissue, organ and vessel.

A slight abrasion of the cuticle, or the rupture of a cell, is followed by particles of fluid which were formerly overlooked as of no account. But the microscope has revealed to us that this apparently useless, insignificant ooze is the vital, living part of the body; it is bioplasm.

This is the mechanic, the skilled artist, that constructs the cells, builds the organs, and perhaps, under the direction of a higher power, adapts each part to one harmonious whole.

For the last fifteen years, certain English and German physiologist have spent much time with the microscope, watching this workman. They have seen it forming tissue, muscle, and nerve, changing food into blood, making the secretions, and, as parts of the body become worn and effete, silently disintegrating and utilizing them, or removing the useless parts from the body.

The first decided knowledge of bioplasm came by accident (if finding a thing we are searching for can be called accident; is it not rather revelation?) by ascertaining that when a piece of live tissue is immersed in a solution of carmine the bioplasm is stained. This discovery has enabled observers to find and watch this little workman, while busy in constructing every part of the body.

Bioplasm is the builder, not only of the body, but of all animals and plants. In every organized form, whether animal or vegetable, owes its formation and growth.

Bioplasm is a clear, colorless fluid, like thin mucus. Only microscopes of the highest power are of use in studying the substance, for the largest normal masses are not one-thousandth of an inch in diameter; but such microscopes fail to detect in it the least sign of organization. Yet this apparent unorganized substance is the cause of all organization. It is the medium through which dead inorganic matter becomes living, organized.

Remedies Worth Trying.

The Paris correspondent of the Boston Courier, referring to his recovery from a dangerous illness, says: I mention this illness that I may tell you how easily I was cured. I was bent double. I could not breathe. My physician ordered me to take a flat-iron and heat it as hot as I could bear; put a double fold of flannel on the painful part, and move the iron to and froon the flannel. I was cured as by enchantment. My doctor told me that some time since a professor in one of our colleges, after suffering some days with neuralgia in the head, which he himself had tried to cure, sent for the former, who prescribed a hot flat-iron. The next time the doctor saw the professor, the latter exclaimed with mock anger: "I really shall not pay you any fee! What! I had no sooner applied the heated iron to my head than instantly all pain vanished! That is as simple as good day; surely you cannot expect a fee for it!" My physician was summoned recently to the bedside of a woman who had neuralgia in both sides, and so violently she alarmed the whole neighborhood by the screams which her intolerable anguish wrung from her. She was taken from her bed and borne near the fire. In such severe cases a heated iron is not energetic enough. He has an iron rod fastened in an ivory handle. He heats this rod to white heat (which causes less pain than red heat) and applies it very slightly to the seat of pain, first in longitudinal, then in latitudinal lines. The application is so light that no trace is left, but red lines on the epidermis which are soon effaced. In twenty minutes the woman walked back to bed, and the third day afterwards quitted it entirely freed from neuralgia. This instrument is not to be entrusted to awkward hands. Three weeks ago, one of our brilliant artists was invited to shoot by the owner of a chateau in whose grounds there are wild fowl in abundance. He woke, the morning after arriving at this gentleman's house, with sciataca in his right thigh. The nearest doctor was sent for. "I can do nothing which will give you immediate relief." The artist is a patient of my physician. He told the doctor what to do. The latter declined taking the responsibility of any such violent treatment. "But I assume all responsibility." The doctor applied an iron rod heated to white heat, but so awkwardly that the artist has scars the size of a five franc piece on his thigh. He was nevertheless cured, and enjoyed a week's sport without another twitch of pain.

The horses of the German army are now fed with biscuits. They consist of thirty parts of oat flour, thirty parts of dextrinated pea flour, thirty parts of rye flour, and ten parts of linseed flour; sometimes of twenty parts of pea flour, twenty parts of wheat flour, twenty parts of corn meal, twenty parts of rye flour, twenty parts of grated bread, and ten parts of linseed flour. The ingredients are made into biscuits. The first-named mixture is the best. These biscuits are made with a hole in the middle of each, so they can be strung and hung to the saddle-bow, or be carried by the trooper around the waist. Each biscuit weighs, baked dry and hard, about two ounces. Seven biscuits are broken up and given to the horse in the morning, moistened with water, if convenient; otherwise dry—twelve at noon and seven at night. After careful experiments in camp, on the march and campaigning, they are reported by all the cavalry and artillery officers better than oats. A trooper can easily carry thirty pounds of these biscuits, which will furnish his horse with full rations for eight days, or will serve, with forage, for twenty days' hard marching.

Changes Imperative.

It is certain that the surveys and exploring expeditions now in progress will soon require the preparation of new maps, while the vast system of re-arrangements in the boundaries of counties, and the creation of new states and the annexation of old ones, indicates that already the time has come. The text of our school geographies must conform to the fixed facts of political geography. No map of Europe, a year old, is reliable. The northern coast of Siberia must be rectified on our maps. School books should be true to the facts of to-day.

Arithmetic is used in mechanics, engineering, commerce and finance, and the tendency is toward a decimal system in money, weight and extension in its three directions. A common unit is sought whose rates of increase and decrease shall be ten.

We cannot estimate the result of this tendency. The decimal metric system is in exclusive use in eighteen states, comprising a population of 236 millions of inhabitants; its use is optional, but legal, in the three English speaking states, with a population of 75 millions; is admitted in principle or partially for customs in five states, with 349 millions of inhabitants; it is in principle or nationally, or legally established in twenty-six states, with a population of 655 millions. Four states have decimal systems, based not on the metre as the unit. These states comprise 471 million inhabitants. At this date more than half the people of civilized states legally recognize the decimal metric system of weights and measures.

The christian states have been devising a common system of decimal coinage. The chief obstacle is the want of a unit of value.

In chemistry, there are now recognized several elementary substances not known a few years since, while a most intractable gas, has been reduced to a liquid. Electro-magnetic science must be rewritten, and spelling reform has descended from the regions of theory to the newspaper and fireside discussion.

Our school books should be free to appropriate any discovery in science or change of form, or system of calculation. And doubtless they will if they are let alone. But if the books of this day are by contract, placed in schools to remain for a series of years, no improvement or change in their design, character or adaptation to teaching things as they may be, can be a anticipated. Their educational value can not increase, while if new standards of value, weight or extension be adopted, that value must be greatly impaired or quite destroyed.

There is a movement countenanced in very respectable quarters to secure fiat spelling, and fiat writing and printing. If it will go one step farther and establish fiat pronunciation, we will admit that a legislative enactment can prevent fish from biting, if the angler has not paid his poll tax.

School books are helps to pupils to learn what they will need to know when they are grown up. While they should be as good as possible, any policy which shuts them up to improvement is contrary to sound education and true science. Yet, a policy which impresses on them an unchanging character of contents; closes them to a recognition of newly discovered facts, and prevents them from adapting themselves to new systems of values, or new applications of the properties of numbers. If historic truth should prevail over the partiality of patriotism, American history will need to be rewritten. Lee, at Monmouth, will not then escape with a charge of vacillation. His treachery will not be vailed in a doubt.

We deprecate in the interests of public schools a policy which requires the books of yesterday to be the books for successive years, thereby depriving them of their best character, that of keeping themselves adapted to the varying wants of pupils. If such a policy may be detrimental to schools, it is still more detrimental to the general welfare. It is an extreme interference with the right of individual action. There have been discussions of sumptuary laws, but an enactment to determine what books alone may be used in the people's school is a precedent of an extreme character.

It is not easy to overestimate the importance of leaving school books free to be improved, rearranged, or rewritten, to meet the real wants of pupils. Even the foundation of christian morals has been disturbed by the researches of a few scientists into the origin and principle of physical life. A similar investigation is going on in the department of intellectual life and development. It is easy to trace the influence of this on the methods of education. Teachers find it advisable to have more "drill work," and present overtures to publishers to prepare books for this specific end. There is a healthy drift among teachers to push their work beyond the point of simple instruction, beyond the point of comprehension by their pupils, to ease, rapidity and accuracy in the use of the knowledge. The order of the studies, or what branches should be first taught, is not neglected. This is not settled, but the discussion must have an influence on the character of text-books. It is unwise to place restrictive financial disabilities in the way of changes in these books to increase the efficiency of school work. Schools should be left open to all advantages, and any gain in their educational value, will be cheaply purchased by leaving the power to exercise it at will, to the decision of those immediately concerned.

But the school district fills another office than maintaining a school for popular education of children. It has a great and almost an unsuspected political value. From its importance, its universality, and its nearness to the sacred interests of parents, it is the primary republic in the state; the first teacher of the duties and powers of self-government; the first place where official accountability is enforced by the wakeful solicitude of the people. It needs some restraints of law to protect it from the capriousness of reckless innovators, but generally it is the best thing for the legislature to let alone.

Brevity.

The king of Zulu-land is said to have recently addressed a note to the British officer at South Africa as follows: "Excellency—First came the missionary, next the consul, now the army. Cetywayo." This brief letter recalls some short speeches and curt correspondence which will doubtless be delightful reading in these times of long harrangues at Albany and Washington. A western judge once upon a time, addressed the grand jury in these words: "Gentlemen: The weather is extremley hot; I am very old; you know your duty—perform it." Another American judge once interspersed in an odd way to several pages of words. He was sitting in chambers, and turning from the pile of papers in the lawyer's hands, that a certain case was likely to be a long one, he asked: "What is the amount in question?" "Two dollars, your honor," said the plaintiff's counsel. "I'll pay it," said the judge, handing over the money, "call the next case." An English judge was more patient. He listened for a couple of days to the arguments of counsel as to the construction of an act, and finally observed, when they were done: "Brothers, that act was repealed a year ago." One morning a woman was shown into Dr. Abernethy's room. Before he could speak she bared her arm, saying, "burn." "A poultice," said the doctor. Next day she called again, showed her arm, and said: "Better." "Continue the poultice," was the response. A few days afterward she came again; then she said: "Well. Your fee?" "Nothing," said the great physician; you are the most sensible woman I ever saw." Lord Berkeley, wishing to apprise the Duke of Dorset of his changed condition, wrote: "Dear Dorset: I have just been married, and am the happiest dog alive. Berkeley." The answer came: "Dear Berkeley: Every dog has his day. Dorset." The editor of a Chicago newspaper, wanting the details of a terrible inundation in Connecticut, telegraphed to a correspondent at Hartford: "Send full particulars of the flood." The reply came quickly: "Yc [illegible] them in Genesis."

The locomotive muscles are entirely dependent on stimulus. We once saw a young lady reclining on a sofa with such a languid air that we felt almost sure she was suffering from incipient paralysis. The next day she was slowly walking across a green pasture, picking a flower here and there as though the effort was terribly exhausting. Suddenly, however, there loomed up in front of her, and in her immediate vicinity, a creature with horns. With slow and measured step he advanced, and then catching sight of a red shawl he filled the air with a clarion note of defiance. The locomotive muscles of that languid maiden were galvanized into spasmodic action. She ran twenty yards with the speed of a gazelle and then cumbed over a five-rail fence with a rapidity that was startling. What we need in this life is impulse, and when we have enough of it we can accomplish wonders.

Worthy of Praise.

As a rule we do not recommend Patent Medicines, but when we know of one that really is a public benefactor, and does positively cure, then we consider it our duty to impart that information to all. Electric Bitters are truly a most valuable medicine, and will surely cure Billiousness, Fever and Ague, Stomach, Liver and Kidney Complaints, even where all other remedies fail. We know whereof we speak, and can freely recommend them to all. Sold at fifty cents abottle at.

An ounce of mother is worth a pound of clergy.

He that cannot bear with other people's passions, cannot govern his own.

To be open to argument and to be open to conviction are two different things.

A man's character is like a fence, for you cannot strengthen it by whitewash.

The loss of the productive power of a farm is far more baneful than an operatic air on a piano that is not.

A man often needs his anger—as well as his other passions—to blast away the obstacles in his path; but the indiscriminate use of nitro-glycerine is dangerous and destructive.

Thought steals over the earth like a mournful feeling over the soul, and in our sorrowful moods, as in the shadow of the evening, we see stars that were before invisible.

If men would but see more of the future in the present, and mark the harvest in the bud, then life would be more beauteous to them than it is.

The great moments of life are but moments like the others. Your doom is spoken in a word or two. A single look from the eyes, a mere pressure of the hand, may decide it; or of the lips, though they cannot speak.

It is difficult, I own, to blend and unite tranquillity in accepting, and energy in using, the facts of life; but it is not impossible; if it be, it is impossible to be happy.

In many matters of opinion, our first and last coincide, though on different grounds; it is the middle stage which is farthest from the truth. Childhood often holds a truth with its feeble fingers, which the grasp of manhood cannot retain—which is the pride of utmost age to recover.

An eight-day clock is pretty good on the run, but if anything can beat the way a dollar's worth of milk tickets galop into the misty past, we're ready to take a half interest in it.

Of course no woman ever did such a thing, but supposing now for the sake of argument, as it were, that a woman was to go to church for the purpose of showing off her new sacque, would it be sacreligious, so to speak?

A fond mother, hearing that an earthquake was coming, sent her boys to the country to escape it. After a few days she received a note from the friend, saying: "For goodness sake, take your boys away and send along that earthquake instead."

"My dearest Maria," wrote a recently married husband to his wife. She wrote back: "Dearest, let me correct either your grammar or your morals. You address me, 'My dearest Maria.' Am I to suppose you have other dear Marias?"

A very old lady on her death-bed, in a penitential mood, said: "I have been a great sinner more than eighty years, and didn't know it." An old darkey woman who had lived with her a long time exclaimed: "Lors! I knowed it all de time."

A professor, lecturing on the effect of the wind in some western forests, remarked: "In traveling along the road I even sometimes found the logs bound and twisted together to such an extent that a mule couldn't climb over them so I went around."

"What was the principal element of my success?" asked a reformed milkman of wealth at a workingmen's convention, the other day; and, behold, his modesty overcame his assurance when a ragged boy from the gallery answered back, "Water, you old cheat."

We have never been able to understand how it is that a woman who is apparently deaf when her husband asks her where the half dollar is which he left in his pantaloons pocket before going to bed, can hear the wail of her two weeks old baby down two flights of stairs and through three deal doors.

At a popular store famous for the prompt and polite attention of the clerks, a woman of perhaps thirty years was looking at goods, when a young man stepped towards her, and asked, "Is any one waiting upon you?" She stared at the clerk, and exclaimed, "Why, what a question! I've been married these ten years."

A clerk in a Philadelphia bookstore thinking to annoy a Quaker customer who looked as though he was fresh from the country, handed him a volume saying, "Here is an excellent essay on the rearing of calves." "Thee had better present that to thy mother, young man," was the spontaneous reply of the Quaker.

About Parsnips.

The parsnip, writes a correspondent, is the only root which will remain in the ground all the winter, not only without injury, but to its great benefit; since after the winter's frost the root is not only larger, but sweeter and richer than it was in the fall; and could it be plowed out without the expense of digging, it would form a most desirable crop for fresh cattle and hog food in the spring. It admits, too, of being sown in the fall, and comes so early as to almost, if not quite, outgrow the hardiest and quickest growing of our weeds. Fallsown parsnips with one good hoeing, as soon as the rows may be seen, will afterwards nearly, if not quite, take care of themselves.

To get the benefit of the parsnip as a farm and cattle-feeding crop, we must change the character of its growth, reduce its length and depth, and increase its width. If it could be grown the shape of an early horn carrot, all requirements would be met, and it could then be plowed out as wanted in the spring with but little trouble and expense.

Late experiments have shown that the parsnip readily yields to improvement by selecting the seed-bearing roots, and it is believed that if the short, thick roots from a crop were selected as seed-bearers, the character of the shape of the roots could be greatly changed, if not altogether altered, from their present type in a few years. The 'Student parsnip,' one of the best, if not the very best kind, was obtained in seven years by selection from the wild weed parsnip, which grows on the Cotswold hills in Britain.

The writer has never grown bad parsnips into better ones, but he has with much interest observed the annual decadence of the quality of good roots when allowed to become self-sown and grow as they please without cultivation; the deterioration of the quality of the plant is most rapid, and it soon degenerates down into the stringy, fangy type of the wild parsnip.

Those who have dug many parsnips, or who have sorted over heaps of the roots, cannot but have observed specimens of short, thick roots, entirely different from the rest of the crop. These roots, if planted for seed, would most certainly perpetuate the peculiar character of the parent root, and in a few transformations the new type might be permanently fixed, and even turnip-rooted parsnips eventually be obtained. The long, tapering roots being those that are considered the handsomest in the eyes of the gardener, and the ones which are supposed to be the best adapted for cooking, are naturally the ones now saved for seed, and hence the deep growing, smooth and tapering roots are perpetuated.

The parsnip, particularly after being allowed to stand in the ground all the winter, contains a considerable amount of sugar—the chemical books say 12 per cent. If so, there must a great amount of glucose in it, but different kinds, no doubt, vary considerably in richness, as do the beet and other garden and field roots.

That parsnips contain a considerable amount of crystalizable sugar, anyone can prove for themselves by grating the root, pressing out and then purifying the juice with lime, skimming and settling the boiled syrup, then destroying the effects of the quicklime by carbonic acid, and finally by phosphoric and sulphuric acid, and eventually boiling down the syrup into molasses. These, if stood by in a warm place, eventually (after a considerable time) yield a considerable portion of crystalized sugar, which may be obtained pure from the molasses by the centrifugal machine, and cleansed the same as beet sugar. This, however, is a mere fanciful experiment, and it is not for one moment urged that sugar could thus be profitably extracted.

One of the old English home-made standard wines is "parsnip wine", the recipe for which is found in any old English cookery-book. It makes a most excellent home-made wine, and when drank carries with it some of the flavor of the original root, but not offensive to those who like the root.

There is one very curious thing about growing parsnip seed which is not generally observed. After seed has been raised in or near one place in the garden from year to year, the plant, when the "umbels" are in full green seed, will at times be affected by a caterpillar, which feeds on the green seeds, and eventually destroys most of them. These worms are most pugnacious, and will attack either a finger or a stick presented to them, and when irritated will even pursue the attacking instrument all across the umbel, biting and nipping at it most savagely with their formidable forceps. This is the only actually "belligerant" worm the writer ever met with. Many caterpillars which are armed with forceps will pinch and defend themselves when squeezed or injured, but this is the only one which will deliberately and violently become the assailant of a disturbing influence.

In growing parsnip seed, it must be borne in mind that the seed loses its vitality after the second year of keeping, and will be greatly injured by keeping over to the second season, let it be ever so carefully preserved. The first season nearly, if not quite, all seeds vegetate; this will account to many for a miss crop of bought seeds. Sow the seed the first year it is raised, and nearly every seed will grow

CURE FOR HOG CHOLERA.—A correspondent of the Kansas Farmer says, a farmer in this county, extensively engaged in the hog business, here and in Marshall county, and who has suffered from the loss of over 100 hogs this year, has a remedy, which he says cures in every case. The remedy is so simple and costs so little, that I hope all our farmers will try it, and report your success. My informant breaks a box of concentrated lye into a barrel of clean water, and when the lye is dissolved, gives it to the hogs as drink. A neighbor who had lost some 200 hogs this season, tried the cure, with entire success; every one of the sick hogs got well, and none have sickened since. He says he had in his feeding lot, a hog which would weigh 400 pounds, so near dead that he thought it useless to try to save him, but second thought said, try anyhow. So he rolled him on his back and poured a pint of the liquid, made stronger than in the barrel, down his throat, and in less than an hour, porker was on his feet, cracking corn nearly as lively as ever.

Inexhaustible beds of lignite are found between Jaffa and the Dead Sea. This with the asphaltum, also abundant, will make the Holy Land a coal supplier for all Egypt and Syria, both of which having no wood, pay from $12 to $14 a ton for foreign coal.

Farm Notes.

Fifty-three per cent. of the population of France are engaged in agriculture. Of this number one-fifth cultivate their own property.

Horses and cattle in Japan are shod with shoes made simply of rice straw. They are said to answer an excellent purpose for a single day.

A small quantity of superphosphate dropped upon potatoes when planting increase the yield, and is a remedy against worms and insects, by which scab and other diseases are produced.

Coarse fodder, such as corn stalks, straw and over-ripe hay, is improved one-quarter to one-half of its value by steaming before feeding. But the gain in steaming good hay is inconsiderable.

Recent calculations represent that the Italian workman receives 17 and 20 per cent. of the profit of his work; the Frenchman 47 per cent., the Englishman 59 per cent., and the American 72 per cent.

Liberal feeding is true economy. The aim should be to induce animals of all kinds to eat all they have a good appetite for and digest, by changing food and also changing methods of preparing it.

Buy no fertilizers without knowing precisely what they consist of. Peruvian guano, and other reliable fertilizers, when genuine, always have a brand upon their bags, with a statement of their analysis.

Wheat-growing in Great Britain is slowly declining in area; the average yield has been increased one to one and a half bushels within 100 years, and now is estimated at twenty-eight bushels.

One of the most remarkable evidences of poor farming is indifference to the quality of seed. Let our readers give this subject special attention, plant and sow only the very best seed to be had, and a large crop will reward the trouble and expense.

As an indication of the exportation of cattle and fresh meat from the United States, official figures state that 30,925 live beeves, 19,724 sheep, and 1,692 hogs, and 72,409 carcasses of beef, 56,034 of mutton, and 9,008 of hogs were shipped to England in 1878 from the port of New York alone.

We clip the following from the Troy, N. Y. Times: Letters pour in daily, sometimes by dozens, scores, and hundreds, to Dr. David Kennedy, of Roundout, N. Y., in grateful acknowledgement of the great benefits received from his 'Favorite Remedy.' And they illustrate the power of the medicine in some new, and perhaps, hitherto untested phase of operation. But if is when a sufferer comes miles to tell the story of his deliverance in person, to grasp the doctor by the hand and greet him as a true and valued friend, that the interest in his case deepens and multiplies."

Improving Backward.

There are many grand improvements now before the public intended to enable lazy, shiftless people to farm better than their more sensible and industrious neighbors. Patent cow-milkers are an abomination; they unnaturally distend the natural orifice of the teat, finally permanently ruining the cow by rendering her unable to hold her milk at all. Patent egg-food is another, forcing hens to lay out of season, and finally preventing them from laying in season. Any tool, instrument or treatment which violates nature must rapidly lessen the real value of the animal upon which it is used, far beyond any temporary advantage from its employment. Good health among stock is the best security that the animals will yield well; and sensible people who own good animals cannot be wheeled into the use of any quack nostrum or quack machine. On the other hand, those folks who own poor stock, and expect to suddenly make it valuable by the use of these foolish devices, show how little they know of their business.

I caught a severe cold, and remembering you told me to use "Downs' Elixir," I bought a bottle and in less than three days my cough and sore throat had vanished! It's good.

The Pope on Brains and Legs.

When Pius IX. was Pope, Fanny Elssler visited Rome, danced and set the public crazy. In forty-eight hours the gilded youth, her admirers, had subscribed twelve thousand francs and bought a splendid crown to be presented to her as a testimonial. When the time came for presenting the danseuse with it, one of the subscribers, an excellent young noble, obtained an audience of the pope and asked if there would be anything wrong in the presentation—if the pope had any objections. "I have neither objection to make nor advice to offer," said his holiness, "but it does seem to me that you might have pitched upon a more appropriate gift. In my simplicity as a priest, I have always thought that crowns were made for heads and not for legs." The crown was duly given to the danseuse, who meanwhile had heard of the pope's saying, and promptly sent the value of the gift in money to the parish priest for the poor. Pius IX. heard of this in his turn, and when next he met one of the subscribers to the testimonial said to him: "You were quite right in giving that woman that crown—she has just proved that there is more sense in her legs than you had in your heads."

A good Baptist clergyman of Bergen, N. Y., a strong temperance man, suffered with kidney trouble, neuralgia, and dizziness almost to blindness, over two years after he was told that Hop Bitters would cure him, because he was afraid of and prejudiced against "Bitters." Since his cure he says none need fear but trust in Hop Bitters.

PILES! PILES!! PILES!!!

A Sure Cure Found at Last. No One Need Suffer.

A sure cure for the Blind, Bleeding, Itching and Ulcerated Piles has been discovered by Dr. Williams (an Indian remedy), called Dr. Williams' Indian Ointment. A single box has cured the worst chronic cases of 25 and 30 years standing. No one need suffer five minutes after applying this wonderful soothing medicine. Lotions, Instruments, and Electuaries do more harm than good. Williams' Ointment absorbs the tumors, allays the intense itching (particularly at night after getting warm in bed), acts as a poultice, gives instant and painless relief, and is prepared only for Piles, Itching of the private parts, and nothing else.

Read what the Hon. J. M. Coldwell, of Cleveland, says about Dr. Williams' Indian Pile Ointment: "I have used scores of pile cures, but it affords me pleasure to say that I have never found anything which gave such immediate and permanent relief as Dr. Williams' Indian Ointment."

A NEW YEAR —WITH— New and Increased Attractions!

The Home Magazine occupies, and has always occupied a field especially its own. While gathering for its pages from the whole range of general literature, the editor and his efficient co-laborers exercise the most careful discrimination in regard to quality and influence. Nothing is admitted which, in their view, can give false ideas of life, or weaken the bonds of virtue. No matter what may be the reputation, nor how brilliant the talents of the writer, if his moral teachings are at all questionable, they can not find a place in our magazine.—And beyond this, its publishers claim that in its peculiar character and varied departments it is more thoroughly identified with the people in their every-day life and home and social interests than any other first-class periodical.

The Home Magazine for 1882 will be the most interesting and attractive that has yet appeared.

WHAT OUR SUBSCRIBERS SAY.

"The day on which the Home Magazine comes is hailed every month with joy, not only by myself, but the whole family. It is like the face of an old friend."

ENTERED AT THE POST OFFICE AT TECUMSEH, MICHIGAN, AS SECOND CLASS MATTER.

TECUMSEH, MICH., MAR. 2, 1882.

The Greenbackers of Michigan are taking the field in good season. A conference was held at Grand Rapids on the 22d ult., and it was resolved to hold a Greenback state convention in that city on the 8th of June.

The Adrian post office war has been ended by the selection of the location on South Main street, in the store of Col. Colvin. As soon as the necessary alterations can be made the office will be moved in to the new quarters.

The legislature is thus far proving itself to be a working body. The tax commission bill has been considered in committee of the whole, and two or three apportionment schemes have already been prepared. An early adjournment is looked for.

The old Mississippi has been on a terrible spree for the past few days.—The water reached the highest point known since the year 1832, just fifty years ago. The Ohio river has been on a rampage also, and much damage has been done to property along the banks.

The boilers of a large flouring mill in Brooklyn, N. Y., exploded last week. The official inspectors examined them and reported them unsafe, and thereupon the proprietors took immediate steps to prevent accident by insuring the boilers. This was a wise forethought of course, but it did not restore the lives that were lost by the explosion.

The appointment of Roscoe Conkling to the Supreme Bench was a genuine surprise. It is thought by many that it was done for effect, and that Conkling will decline after his confirmation shall here taken place. One theory is that Conkling will decline and then Judge Folger will be placed on the Supreme Bench and Conkling be given the Treasury Department.

The latest political gossip is that Gov. Tilden has formed an alliance with Gov. Palmer, of Illinois, for a ticket in 1884 composed of Tilden & Palmer. The report is very "fishy" to say the least. Uncle Sammy does not proclaim his purposes two or three years in advance, and besides Watterson tells us that the man whose salary was drawn by R. B. Hayes is permanently out of politics.

Adrian is recovering from the Navin shock and the city is gaining her equilibrium again. Fred Clark has been discharged, Stanton and Jewell are both released on bail, the Times has cooled off, the Record has simmered down, Stearns is inventorying the political scalps that hang at his girdle, while the Council have resumed their accustomed avocation, that of playing boy about offering a reward for the absconded mayor.

John Kelly has at last kicked himself entirely out of the Democratic party. The treachery of the Tammany Hall members of the New York legislature has severed the last link which bound them to the New York Democracy, and has relieved them of the millstone which has been dragging them into the mire so long.—Honest Democrats may well rejoice at the riddance. Whether honest Republicans will welcome their latest converts is another question.

Adrian Times: While the city waits for action from the county officials in the matter of offering a reward for our missing mayor, and the county officials wait the action of the city council, no reward is offered. $1,000 can be raised here by private subscription, if any body will take hold of the matter in earnest.

The left-handed compliment contained in the above is not merited by the county officials at all. If the city council have no regard for their own good name, and have not manly courage enough to pledge the city's money for Navin's arrest we see no reason why the county officials should pledge our money for that purpose. Sheriff Bidwell has done exactly right in this matter. Let us help those who help themselves. The outside towns are willing to assist Adrian in catching her model mayor, but the city council ought certainly to have respect enough for public sentiment and knowledge enough of the commonest rules of official propriety to take the initiative by first offering a proper reward themselves.

THE GOVERNOR'S MESSAGE.

Senators and Gentlemen of the House of Representatives:

The constitution of the state provides that "the governor may convene the legislature on extraordinary occasions." Such an occasion has been reached. An emergency of pressing character has caused me to exercise the power at an earlier day than would otherwise have been necessary.

A district covering portions of Huron, Sanilac, Tuscola, St Clair and Lapeer counties was widely devastated in September last by forest fires, the property of 3,281 families destroyed, and 14,438 persons made dependent upon public aid. In this calamity 1,521 dwellings were consumed, together with 1,480 barns, hundreds of miles of fences, domestic animals in great numbers and vast quantities of household furniture, clothing, and agricultural implements, with accumulated stores of food. The losses of those who have asked and received aid, as shown by sworn appraisals, amounted to $2,346,943, or an average of over $726 for each family. To add to the terrible aspects of these dreadful misfortunes, nearly 300 human beings perished in consequence, by suffocation and by burning. No reference is made in this estimate to the losses of those who have neither asked nor required assistance, which is known to have been of great magnitude; nor to those of a public nature, among which were 51 school houses and a large number of churches and highway bridges.

The destruction thus wrought left men, women and children destitute of either clothing, food or shelter—all that was consumable had been swept away. It covered a territory of over 1,800 square miles, and in the progress of its ravages swept the entire district within from two to four hours after it began. No time was given to save even household treasures. With a furious wind came smoke and intense darkness, followed quickly by a fervent heat that nothing could withstand. The wonder is not that so many perished, but that so many escaped.

The urgent necessities created by this calamity demanded instant relief. Before the fires were exhausted food and clothing were being administered from neighboring communities. The people of this state and other states responded to appeals to their humanity with a broad and kindly generosity that can never be forgotten. Seldom within the memory of this generation has the kinship of mankind been demonstrated by more marked and tangible manifestations. The thanks of the state are due to every individual who came to the help of our suffering fellow-citizens at this trying juncture, and they especially belong to the men and women of our sister commonwealths and the neighboring British provinces. In addition to large amounts contributed for this relief by churches, societies and individuals directly to the sufferers, of which is known to aggregate many thousands of dollars, there has been received by the state fire relief commission, the Detroit and Port Huron committees, and committees of other localities, as reported to me, the sum of $623,436 89 in cash, together with donations in kind, which when added to the cash contributions would equal the sum of one million dollars.

The country where the fires raged is purely agricultural, without other local industries to furnish employment, consequently after the first distresses were relieved, the unfortunate people whose wants we are now considering, being left with nothing but bare land, were compelled to elect between seeking new homes elsewhere or to depend upon being sustained by other than their own resources until they could reach self-support from the product of their own farms. They chose the latter course, with the most encouraging results thus far, and have devoted their energies and labor to rebuilding houses and fences, and to sowing fall grain, the returns from which can only be realized at the coming harvest.

In order to succeed in the course adopted and to continue in the occupancy of their lands as homes, these people must be sustained until their crops mature. They must have food until harvest, and food for their animals until the grass grows. They also require seed for their spring crops. The contributed funds will soon be spent and the harvest is months in the future.

The exigencies of the case demand action, and to afford relief is no longer a question of policy—it is an imperative duty. The state cannot permit its people to want for food. In 1859, under similar circumstances to a limited extent, citizens were aided from the treasury of the state, and the act was in harmony with the judgement and sentiment of the people.

For more specific information you are respectfully referred to the report of the state fire relief commission, which covers the transactions of committees at Detroit, East Saginaw, Bay City and Flint, and to the statement of the Port Huron committee, both of which are hereto appended. I commend the wants of these unfortunate people to your generous consideration.

The tax rolls for the townships of Forester and Evergreen, in the county of Sanilac, were destroyed in the general conflagration, and legislation is now asked to legalize the action of their authorities in making subsequent provision for the collection of the taxes in those townships. I recommend that the necessary action be taken.

TAX COMMISSION.

During the last session you made provision for the appointment of a commission to prepare a bill for the assessment, levy and collection of taxes. The commission appointed has performed its work with much labor and intelligence. The bills so prepared are herewith submitted for your consideration. I have confidence that upon examination the work of the commission will commend itself in its comprehensiveness as a great improvement over the present system, and will receive at your hands such careful consideration as the importance of the subject demands.

CONGRESSIONAL APPORTIONMENT.

A bill for the reapportionment of the popular representation in congress, on the basis of the tenth census, only awaits the signature of the president to become a law, and it will devolve upon you to adjust the congressional districts of the state in accordance therewith.

Two members have been added to the representation of Michigan, and the relative progress which this fact exhibits will be a subject of general congratulation among our citizens.

THE STATE HOUSE OF CORRECTION AND REFORMATION AT IONIA.

The number of inmates in this institution on the first of the present month had increased to 390. The contracts for their labor covered but one-half this number, or 300, leaving 300 unemployed, save those necessary to do the domestic work of the prison. For the latter purpose 90 are sufficient. What can be done to employ the 240 idle prisoners? One hundred of them are now constantly locked in their cells, and the remainder kept at unremunerative and substantially unnecessary work. This it is evident that the number of prisoners has increased out of proportion to the preparation of their place of employment. This is not for lack of opportunities to contract for their labor. The managers report applications for labor, at fair prices, for manufacturing purposes to be carried on within the prison walls.

The shops now constructed are occupied by the present contractors, and employment cannot be increased until more room is provided.

The managers have submitted plans for additional shops, to cost some $10,000 for material, the prisoners to do the labor of construction. They also estimate that the prison receipts can thereby be increased from $30 to $40 per day without additional current expense, and the men relieved at the same time from constant confinement. I think the needed appropriation should be made to carry out the plan of the managers.

I desire to call your attention to another embarrassment in the management of the prison. The law now permits courts to sentence females to this institution, while there are no provisions for their care or employment. The latter should be provided or the former prohibited. I recommend the adoption of the latter course, and suggest that section 12, act No. 110, laws of 1879, and section 3, act No. 159, laws of 1881, relative to disorderly persons, be so amended as to take from the courts the power to send females to this prison.

STATE REFORM SCHOOL.

The number of inmates in this institution has increased steadily until enlarged accommodations are a necessity. A portion of one of the old central buildings is in a dangerous condition. The material was poor and the construction very defective. An inspection lately made by competent builders at my request satisfies me that attention should be given the matter at once.

The members of the board of control having charge of the school have heretofore been paid for their services out of special appropriations. This has been suspended by the modification of the law during the last session.

I recommend that consideration be given to these subjects, and such action be taken as the exigencies require.

MICHIGAN SCHOOL FOR THE BLIND.

The location of this institution at Lansing was only settled by the legislature in the last hours of its regular session. The delay in selecting a permanent site had prevented the management from adopting a definite plan on which to base an intelligent request for an appropriation.

No appropriation has been made for permanent improvements since the original act establishing the school. The funds heretofore provided have been exhausted, and improvements are needed to accomodate the increased demand for admission. Your attention is respectfully called to the subject.

EASTERN MICHIGAN ASYLUM.

The completion of the additional wings to the asylum at Pontiac will render its capacity equal to the asylum at Kalamazoo, and will necessitate a corresponding increase in the medical staff. The present appropriation is insufficient for this purpose, and an additional sum is a necessity to duly equip the asylum. I recommend an appropriation for salaries for officers for this asylum equal to that made for Kalamazoo.

MICHIGAN REFORM SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.

The board of control for the reform school for girls calls my attention to the want of facilities for surgical treatment of its inmates, and respectfully ask that section 1 of act 138, session laws of 1881, be so amended as to include this school. I commend the request to your consideration.

CONTINGENT DAMAGES TO STATE INSTITUTIONS BY FIRE.

At present there is no insurance against losses by fire occuring in any of the state institutions, nor is there any provision therefor. The embarrassments growing out of the destruction of similar property in other states during the past year cause a natural feeling of insecurity here, especially among the managers of our asylums.

Resolved, That the board of trustees of the Eastern Michigan asylum, and for the Michigan asylum for the insane, now in joint session, respectfully renew their request to the governor of the state to recommend to the legislature at its approaching extra session that a sum of not less than $100,000 be provisionally appropriated to commence the immediate rebuilding of the asylums for the insane in the event of their injury or destruction by fire.

Were either asylum to be destroyed most serious inconvenience would be felt, and the longer the delay in repairing or rebuilding the more embarrassing would be the difficulty. Nothing could be done until the legislature convened. This would be attended by loss of time, and, should an extra session be necessary, by large expense.

Would it not be wise to place within the control of some state authority a fund sufficient for making repairs or rebuilding to a limited extent any of the state buildings which may be injured or destroyed when the legislature is not in session?

DAVID H. JEROME,
Executive Office Lansing, Feb. 23, 1882.

JOHN R. CLARK, accompanied by his daughter Nellie, has gone East on a lecturing trip. He begins work at Oil City on Sunday March 5th.

JOHN R. CLARK delivered his "To and Fro in London" last Tuesday evening to a splendid audience at the Central M. E. Church of Detroit.

THE Adrian Times is a little out on Mr. Grandy's preaching in Deerfield, Sunday evenings. He does preach there on Monday evenings but has plenty on hand here Sabbaths.

WE regret to learn that Wm. H. Arner, of Raisin, is threatened with insanity. His friends hope for a favorable turn soon, but it may become necessary to convey him to the asylum.

C. S. FITZSIMMONS and family left yesterday for Lansing where they design taking up their permanent residence. They will try the experiment of farming, at least for a season or two.

REV. R. S. PARDINGTON will deliver a lecture to young men next Sabbath evening in the M. E. church on "Some lessons suggested by the bank failure and attempted swindle of Navin & Co."

MRS. WM. LOVETT, who has been confined to her bed since the 2d. of January, has failed rapidly since Friday last. Unless a change for the better sets in soon, she cannot stay here long.

NELSON BURROUGHS of Cherokee, Iowa, gave his friends a surprise last Saturday. He came to Chicago with 400 head of fat cattle the last of the week and dropped over to Tecumseh to stay over Sunday.

THE Farmers' Club will meet at J. W. Gillespie's this week Friday evening. Subject for discussion—"Is a vegetable garden a profitable investment for farmers?" Discussion to be opened by Mr. I. H. Schreder.

Detroit Evening News: Tecumseh congratulates herself upon being free from debt, and although the president of that enterprising village is wintering in Central America he didn't take any corporation coin with him.

THE entertainments which will appear at the Opera House on Saturday and Tuesday evenings next are unexceptionable in every respect. We hope our people will show their appreciation of first-class shows by giving them good audiences.

THE Methodist church of Clarkston of which Rev. O. Whitmore is pastor, and which was to have been sold under mortgage, Feb. 15th, has been saved. The friends of the cause liberally contributed. The M. E. church and friends of this place gave $100 towards it.

HAUSE has gone into an enterprise that every town needs. He has opened up a tea house and will make the sale of choice teas a specialty. He has a place where he can keep tea clean and free from dust, has taken pains to secure the best quality of tea and at the lowest cash price. He is bound to sell.

C. S. FITZSIMMONS lost a pocketbook somewhere between the residences of Mr. Chas. Lawrence and Dr. O. Q. Jones, on last Wednesday evening. The finder will confer a favor and receive a reward by leaving it at the Herald Office. It was a long black leather book, suitable for a breast pocket, and contained a sum of money and papers.

WE understand that the accuracy of our figures in the article on "The Village Finances" last week has been called in question by some. The figures were taken from the village records. These records are public property, and are open to inspection by any one. Any tax payer of the village, who will take the trouble, can examine the records and verify the figures for himself.

EUGENE LOVETT and Andy Ross have purchased the meat-market heretofore run by Mr. Squires and opened their doors for business yesterday morning. Mr. Lovett has had considerable experience in handling live stock, while Andy has handled the cleaver before and is posted in this branch of the business. We presume the new firm will secure their share of the trade.

THE birth-day anniversary of the poet Longfellow was observed by the schools last Friday. Appropriate exercises were held in all the different departments, the programs consisting of essays, recitations, quotations, etc. As we have not the room for the whole program we deem it best to omit it entirely. The exercises were fully up to the standard of previous ones during the year.

REV. ERASTUS N. NICHOLS, M. A.

The late Rev. Erastus N. Nichols, M. A., who was born in Amherst, Mass., Oct. 21, 1797, departed this life at his residence in Tecumseh, Mich., on the 17th day of Feb., 1882.

Clinton, N. Y., was the scene of his later childhood youth studies, graduating from Hamilton college and Auburn theological seminary, 1826-7. He was licensed and ordained a duly ac-

[illegible] Presbyterian denomination from '27 to '35. Mr. Nichols labored variously at Hector, Aurora, Rome, Vernon Center, N. Y., in the ministry, and in Vermont and eastern N. Y. under the American tract society. In 1850 he accepted a call to the Presbyterian church at Clinton, Mich., where for six years he was the esteemed pastor, and afterwards until 1850, when he removed to Tecumseh, he acted as agent for the American Board of Foreign missions, when health failing he retired from the state work ministry, continuing however, down to the time of his death to answer calls of various kinds for ministerial service. As a minister he was thoroughly evangelical, fully crediting the scriptures and honoring the Holy Spirit in all his work and life. No doubt Mr. Finney's ministry affected, for good, his own. Mr. Nichols' cultivated, thoughtful, studious, analytical, literary habits cherished a deep regard for the kingdom of Heaven. He was kind, helpful, amiable, a man among men, quitting his place at the close of a long and honorable life, to stand redeemed among the saints of God.

His public address was characterized by that old time stateliness of approach to the subject in hand, which at once tended to rank him with the past generation of divines, and to lend a quaint charm to his well chosen words—words ever employed to clothe thought, never to merely fill up the time.

Fifty-four years in the christian ministry, 54 years of most happy wedded life, and to almost lay the hand on the 85th birthday, are factors found in but few lives. Our brother rests from his labors. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." W.G.

"HAZEL KIRKE,"

By the New York Madison Square Theatre Company.

Our amusement goers are to be congratulated upon the fact that the Madison Square Theatre Company has been secured for an appearance at the Opera House on Tuesday evening, March 7th, presenting the most successful play in the history of stage achievements, "Hazel Kirke," which has been fittingly spoken of as "a story as simple as a garland of autumn leaves, and as delicately beautiful." This is without doubt the greatest dramatic novelty extant, possessing a depth of interest never equalled by any other stage production, its incidents and situations—comedy and tragedy being skillfully mingled—are so touchingly human. In addition to its memorable run of 486 consecutive nights in New York, "Hazel Kirke" has received over 1,000 more representations throughout the country, being the longest run of any play on record. "Hazel Kirke" will be produced here with the same magnificent scenery and attention to details that have assisted so materially in winning its national renown. It would be difficult to conceive of a more complete and perfect company than that of the Madison Square Theatre, the artists by long familiarity and special fitness having become thoroughly identified with their parts. The capacity of the Opera House will doubtless be tested on the occasion of this production.—Although the expense attached to this company is very large, there will be no advance in prices. Reserved seats can be secured at Adamson's.

Kellogg's Columbian Oil has proved beyond a doubt that it is a safe and reliable remedy, and will cure all aches and pains incident to humanity. Our bodies need strengthening and repairing as much as the house we live in. Old persons are more subject than others to diseases of the kidneys and urinary organs, and the soothing, curative and healing properties of Columbian Oil in extreme cases seem almost incredible.

JOHN HASTINGS had a close call last Sunday. A boy passing along the sidewalk saw smoke escaping from the parlor bed room window on the north side of the house. He gave the alarm and Mr. Hastings upon going into the parlor found the bedroom adjoining all in flames. There was a lively time for a few moments but the fire was finally put out. It is supposed to have caught from a box of friction matches in the bedroom.

Money for a Rainy Day.

"For six years my daughter was sick from kidney and other disorders. We had used up our savings on doctors, when our dominie advised us to try Parker's Ginger Tonic. Four bottles effected a cure, and as a dollar's worth has kept our family well over a year, we have been able to lay by money again for a rainy day."—A Poor Man's Wife.

FROM VERMONT.

MIDDLEBURY, VT., Feb. 20, 1882.

DEAR EDITOR:

As many of your readers are interested in Vermont sheep, perhaps they may wish to know something of Vermont and the sheep as we find them. I have just gathered my sixth load of merino sheep for Michigan breeders; this is my second load for this year. Addison county is [illegible] 6777 merinos were shipped from this station alone the past year to points west and south, Ohio receiving more than any other state and Texas the next greatest number.

This county is much better adapted to stock raising than to farming proper. The most of the land is very rough and mountainous; along the streams the soil is very productive, yielding a bountiful crop of fine hay or rich pastures. But very little corn or wheat is raised, the winters being too cold and summers too short for these cereals. Large dairies are kept in some portions of the state and a great amount of butter made for Boston market, but as before stated the principal stock of Addison county is sheep; this is made a specialty, each trying to raise the best, their finest specimens bringing enormous prices; $200 for ewes and $2500 for rams.—Ohio and Pennsylvania pays the highest prices and of course get the best sheep.

We are glad to say, however, that Michigan is getting much better sheep this year than ever before and more of them. Our relation to the "Great West" ought to make for us the greatest sheep market in the Union. Vermont cannot supply the demand that is made upon her for sheep; Michigan ought to raise sheep for all the demands of the West. She would get the trade if she had the sheep; as it is, thousands of sheep are shipped through our state yearly from Vermont because they cannot get them in Michigan. A man from Kansas loads 115 rams here to-day for that state, who says it would save him 1400 miles of travel and 700 miles of shipping if he could get his sheep in our state.—There is such a demand here that it keeps prices very high. This load of sheep has cost me higher than heretofore; good sheep are scarce and held by those who expected to breed from them, or keep for next season. They are nearly wintered and the prospect of wool and their increase is of considerable importance. I have with me a fine party of young ewes, one and two years old, good enough for any breeder, also some choice ram lambs from some of the most noted stock rams of the state, "Rip Van Winkle," "Stickney 116," "Centennial" and "Eureka 3rd," besides three extra good ones half-brothers to my noted stock ram "General Dix." All these will be on exhibition on my farm, near Manchester, two weeks from to-day. Entertainment free.

THE MODEL MAYOR HEARD FROM.

Las Vegas Daily Optic, Feb. 21.

The honorable Tom Navin, fugitive mayor of Adrian, Mich., about whom the newspapers for the past few days have teemed with interesting items, was in Las Vegas yesterday and talked with an attache of this office. In the vernacular of the western linguist, Tom is "a good one." In appearance he is a beardless youth, good looking, and as sprightly as a June bug. As to honesty, he knows not the meaning of the word, nor the roots upon which it is founded, and for the youngest mayor in the United States, is evidently well versed in law points—sufficiently so, in fact, to enable him to do a heap of dirt and cover up his tracks. Tom was recognized on the street by the reporter, who has lived in adjoining towns to Adrian, and who has known the fugitive official since he was hip high to a croquet wicket. The mayor was slow to acknowledge the acquaintance, but deeming a strict course of diplomacy the better part of valor, he greeted the Optic man cordially and commenced to talk about the country, its resources, prospects and probabilities.—In referring to the Adrian fiasco, Tom said that he was not half so black as he was painted, and while he did not deny that he had jumped the town between two days, he said that other sheep in the flock were the black bucks, and had gotten him into their net and caused all the rumpus. He apparently knew all about the $150,000 city bond swindle, the $80,000 forgery on the Hartford insurance company, the $10,000 "only lung pad" bubble and the illegitimate possession of an old man's "inside" property, for when the reporter spoke of them he grinned a sickly grin, bit his lip and said nothing further than that he felt sure that the detectives were on his track, and he guessed New Mexico atmosphere wouldn't agree with him anyhow. He left last night for the lower country and will be joined by a friend at Albuquerque. From what the reporter could surmise from a close scrutiny of Tom, and judging from a remark or two that he dropped, Adrian's youthful mayor will seek refuge in Old Mexico and that right away, for he seemed pretty thoroughly frightened that he should meet in Las Vegas a man who recognized him and knew so much about his villainies.

Later—Since Tom has gone the Optic is in receipt of instructions, sent out in a general way, to arrest the young hoodoo. The reporter who interviewed Tom is kicking at Uncle Sam's mail service, because it did not bring the papers one day sooner, for then he might have secured a handsome reward, which would have enabled him to go east and see his girl.

They came to Michigan in 1854 and settled upon a farm in Deerfield, where they resided for several years. The family afterwards moved to Tecumseh, where Mr. Cogswell engaged in the lumber business with A. W. Slayton. In 1877 they moved to Paris Landing, Tenn., where they have resided ever since.—Mrs. Cogswell was a regular attendant upon the Universalist church during her residence in Tecumseh, was emphatic in her religious views and very zealous in church work. The funeral services were held Wednesday afternoon at the Presbyterian church of Blissfield, Rev. H. Shepard, of Tecumseh, officiating. The deceased had a large circle of friends in Tecumseh who will unite with the relatives in paying the last sad tribute of respect to the departed.

KNOW THYSELF.

WHAT DOES IT MATTER?

It matters little where I was born,
Or if my parents were rich or poor;
Whether they shrank at the cold world's scorn,
Or walked in the pride of wealth secure;
But whether I live an honest man,
And hold my integrity firm in my clutch,
I tell you, brother, plain as I can,
It matters much!

It matters little how long I stay
In a world of sorrow, sin and care;
Whether in youth I am called away,
Or live till my bones and pate are bare:
But whether I do the best I can
To soften the weight of adversity's touch,
On my fellow-pilgrim on life's weary plain,
It matters much!

It matters little where my grave
Is on the land or on the sea?
By purling brook or beside stormy wave,
It matters little or naught to me;
But whether the angel Death comes down,
And marks my brow with his loving touch,
As one that shall wear the victor's crown,
It matters much!

Some Clever Girls.

I must give an account of an adroit and very pretty and harmless piece of finessing resorted to by a party of young ladies here the other day, by means of which the ladies concerned obtained some very choice seats in the senate gallery, where hundreds were in vain seeking admittance, much to the mystification of certain senators and an attache of one of the legations. The ladies in question have a teacher of modern languages who possesses a remarkably fine presence and a cultivated manner, and speaks French with true French accent. Noticing that the diplomatic gallery was unoccupied, though all the others were packed, the jolly party proposed to their teacher that they should pass themselves off on the polite doorkeeper of the diplomatic gallery as persons entitled to admittance. This agreed to, they marched coolly up, with their teacher at the front, who affecting to be a stranger to the place, asked the doorkeeper in fluent French if that was the diplomatic gallery, and upon receiving an affirmative response, she asked him to admit them, which he proceeded to do with a great flourish, though with surprise in his face, evidently wondering how it happened that these legation people had never presented themselves there before, or that he had never seen them. Into the gallery the fair deceivers filed and took possession of the front seats, with all eyes turned upon them. Senators cast their eyes upward, and stared puzzled, unable to make out to which legation they belonged. Again and again senators turned and looked. A member of one of the legations stepped in on the floor of the senate from the side where the diplomatic gallery is visible. His eyes fell upon the fairy bevy, and he stood and gazed. A senator walked over to him and evidently asked him who the comers were, for the two stood and looked, and walked away mystified. Meanwhile the ladies sat demurely looking on at the proceedings, soberly and calmly, as if they were in their proper place, and were the foreignest of foreigners.

Praise after Death.

Men have commonly more pleasure in the criticism that hurts than in that which is innocuous, and are more tolerant of the severity which breaks hearts and ruins fortunes, than of that which falls impotently on the grave.

And thus well says the good and deep-minded Richard Hooker: "To the wisest and best, while they live, the world is continually a froward opposite, and a curious observer of their defects and imperfections; their virtues afterwards it as much admireth. And for this cause, many times that which deserveth admiration would hardly be able to find favor, if they who propose it were not content to profess themselves therein scholars and followers of the ancient. For the world will not endure to hear that we are wiser than any have been which went before."—Book v. ch. vii. 3. He therefore who would maintain the cause of cotemporary excellence against that of elder time, must have every class of men arrayed against him. The generous, because they would not find matter of accusation against established dignities; the envious, because they like not the sound of a living man's praise; the wise, because they prefer the opinion of centuries to that of days; and the foolish, because they are incapable of forming an opinion of their own. Obloquy so universal is not likely to be risked, and few who make an effort to stem the torrent, as it is made commonly in favor of their own works, deserve the contempt which is their only reward.—Ruskin.

A Simple Protective Against Epidemics.

Those who are at all afraid of epidemic diseases may feel comforted on hearing that one of the best protective measures they can resort to is a very simple one—the use of soap and water. An eminent physician says:

"It is worth while for common people to learn that 50,000 typus germs will thrive in the circumference of a pin-head or a visible globule. It is worth while for them to note that these germs may be dessicated and be borne, like thistle seeds, everywhere, and like demoniacal possessions, may jump noiselessly down any throat. But there are certain things spores cannot stand, according to the latest ascertained results of science. A water temperature of 120 degress boils them to death, and soap chemically poisons them. Here sanitary and microscopic science come together. Spores thrive in low ground and under low conditions of life. For redemption, fly to hot water and soap, ye who live in danger of malarial poisoning. Hot water is sanitary. Soap is more sanitary. Fight typus, smallpox, yellow fever and ague with soap. Soap is a board of health.

Those romantic creatures who hate to call a spade a spade, and who always have the "varioloid" instead of the small-pox, should go to China. Small-pox is called "heaven's flowers," and inoculation is called "cultivating heaven's flowers." It is performed by blowing pulverized scab powder into a child's nostrils. It is a very effective preventive—if the person does not die, of which there is quite as much danger as of the disease taken in other ways.

This is the latest story that is being told of Mr. Southern's "playful eccentricity." He objects to his dog forming new acquaintances, so he fastens two very sharp needles to his nose, leaving the ends projecting about an inch. When a strange dog rushes up to "shake noses" with him, he gets a thrust that sends him off howling, and the effect is such that Mr. Southern's dog cannot get within gun-shot of any other that knows how the trick works.

How Vaccine is Obtained.

Through the kindness of Dr. Bessey, says the Hamilton (Ont.) Star, our reporter recently had an opportunity of visiting Logan's Farm to inspect the process of collecting vaccine lymph from an animal vaccinated for the purpose with cow-pox. On arriving at the farm-house of the late Sir William Logan, (now occupied by Mr. Thomas Irving), we were shown the fine stock of Ayrshire cattle for which the farm is famous. The animal that attracted particular attention was the vaccinated Ayrshire heifer, one year old, valued at $100. It had been [illegible] vaccinated about six days previously, and the spot was now covered with fine crop of genuine cow-pox pustules. The latter were hundreds in number and had the appearance of beads of pearl with a depression in the centre of a crab or slate color, having a whitish rim. The animal having been properly secured to prevent kicking, the pustules were punctured with sharp ivory points, especially made for the purpose. The clear, water-like lymph which exuded from the puncture was collected on the ivory points alluded to, and these were laid on a board to dry. A number of the vesicles were left untouched, so as to produce "scabs, which are still preferred to lymph by many of the older practitioners. The lymph having dried on the ivory points, the latter are carefully packed in cotton wadding, blue paper and tin-foil, and placed in an air-tight tin box in a cool place for preservation. On Logan's Farm are about thirty animals which have had the cow-pox during the past six months. No injury results to them from the infection. In a fortnight all trace of the disease disappears, and the animal is not again susceptible to the infection.

Japanese Customs.

The first act of a young Japanese bride after being conducted to her husband's home is to sacrifice her beauty by shaving her eyebrows, and painting her teeth black. By this strange custom she symbolizes to her husband and to strangers in the street that she has renounced completely every desire to please or coquet. Though sacredly observed while continuing, the marriage-tie of the Japanese is easily broken, the mutual consent of the contracting parties sufficing. Once in possession of the bit of paper by which the husband restores to the wife her liberty, she readily regains her lost beauty; two days enabling her to transform her teeth to their pristine pearly whiteness, and two months of nature giving back to her her beautiful dark eyebrows.

In Japan the respect shown by the lower to the higher classes is extreme. And even between equals the forms of civility are excessive. When two officers or merchants meet in the street they stop still, and before passing exchange grave and profound bows. Even two friends who meet every day are careful never to neglect this ceremony. Among women these forms are still more emphasized. When a friend calls and is once seated on the mat, all bow their foreheads several times to the floor. The first words are thanks for some past service which they really or feignedly call to mind. Then the hostess fills, lights, wipes, and passes to the new-comer her little pipe, and along with it the inevitable cup of tea. It is taken without either milk or sugar. A delicate drink is made from an infusion of peach blossoms, which is offered to favored guests.

We are apt to smile at enthusiastic people, and the smile is mingled with compassion. "He is so enthusiastic," we say apologetically of some friend, and we make the admission as if it implied a want of balance. But what would the world be without enthusiastic souls, or how would its great enterprises be sustained and accomplished? Enthusiasm is the lever by which most of us need to be lifted. The inertness of selfish or preoccupied or indolent souls can only be overcome by this force. For enthusiasm is gifted with the faculty of seeing into futurity, and, overlooking the immediate steps, the toil and effort of the work, beholds a glorious vision of the whole, and is refreshed thereby; while the duller spirits are yet doubting and calculating. Some one has said, and said truly, that "he is old indeed who has outlived his enthusiasm." Well for us if we have kept ours, if we can still be enthusiastic over a fine poem, a noble deed, an exalted faith.—Christian Intelligencer.

A Vexed Clergyman.

Even the patience of Job would become exhausted were he a preacher and indeavoring to interest his audience while they were keeping up an incessant coughing, making it impossible for him to be heard. Yet how very easy can all this be avoided by simply using Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds. Trial bottles given away at

C. A. Wright & Co's.

The other evening, at a little dinner-party up town one of the guests, the younger brother of an English nobleman expressed with commendable freedom his opinion of America and its people. "I do not altogether like the country," said the young gentlemen, "for one reason, because you have no gentry here." "What do you mean by gentry?" asked another of the company. "Well, you know," replied the Englishman. "Well—oh, gentry are those who never do any work themselves and whose fathers before them never did any." "Ah," exclaimed his interlocutor, "then we have plenty of gentry in America, but we don't call them gentry, we call them tramps." A laugh went around the table and the young Englishman turned his conversation into another channel.

Dr. Hume maintains that an English dialect is now in use in Ireland of which the basis is the current English of the time of Elizabeth—the language of the emigrants of 1607 having been handed unimpared, or very little altered, to the present time. He asserts also that when an Englishman requires a glossary of 2,000 words, now obsolete, to understand Shakespeare, an Irish peasant would not need a glossary of more than 200.

OINTMENT.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.
It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.
The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood; by this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates every portion of the human frame; every muscle, vein, nerve, and ligament is searched and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years
This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cure which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should feel perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

Bay City is trying to organize a board of trade.

A State Sanitary convention is to be held at Greenville April 11 and 12.

An old dry goods merchant of Centerville, J. W. Spitzer, has assigned for the benefit of his creditors.

The St. James hotel, at Ann Arbor, will hereafter be run by Nelson Booth who has bought out W. H. Lewis.

J. H. Osman, of Elba, has traded his farm for the Donaldson House property, Lapeer, and takes possession May 1.

Cedar Springs folks are wondering what to do to be saved from a gang of sneak thieves and burglars operating in that neighborhood.

Fifteen wolves followed a team from Beaver Lake station to Au Sable, near St. Helen's one night last week. The driver kept them off by swinging his lantern.

A Newaygo county schoolmaster who built the fires and swept out during his term has just obtained judgment against the school board for services as janitor.

During the past season Ludington, Cadillac, Traverse City, Petoskey and Reed City have put in water works, and other towns are preparing to follow suit next summer.

Grasshoppers, from the size of a flea up, were alleged to be skipping about Oakland county a week ago. It is hoped that they have been thoroughly discouraged by the weather since that date.

The Kalamazoo Commercial thinks the millennium must be at hand. A tramp printer worked in that office a whole week, well and faithfully, and left town quietly without being run into the cooler.

James Hunter made the 40 mile trip from Rogers City to Alpena one day last week with a team of 75-pound dogs attached to a hand sleigh. This makes people think of old times in that section.

The mystery of Jessie Blood's disappearance at St. Clair is yet unsolved. The report of her elopement and marriage is authentically denied. There appears to be little doubt that her body is in one of the rivers.

The President of the Alpena railroad company says he will not move another foot until the right of way, station ground, and $75,000 bonus are guaranteed. Alpena City is pledged for $34,000 of this amount.

A remarkably intelligent dog owned by Capt. Louis Sterling, of Ludington, heard the cries of a man named Benedict, who had broken through the ice in the little lake, and succeeded in directing aid to his assistance in time to save the drowning man's life.

Wilber F. Dennis, treasurer of Columbia township, Van Buren county, a widower, a prominent spiritualist, and a man of wealth, committed suicide on Wednesday of last week by blowing out his brains. His life was insured for $15,000, his accounts are all right, and no cause can be imagined for the act.

When the elevator and flouring mill of Gardner, Campbell & Co., at Irving, was burned last year it was supposed to contain 4,000 bushels of wheat belonging to farmers in the vicinity. The latter now claim to have proof that the wheat had all been ground into flour, and have sued the firm to recover the value.

Three out of the four Pelkey children at Bay City, alleged to have been poisoned by eating candy, have died. A post mortem examination failed to discover any poison, and the indications are that the deaths were caused by epidemic cerebro-spinal meningitis. The cause of this disease is unknown, and may have been produced in this case by the candy.

The wife of James Doras, aged 45 years, was found dead on South Division street, Grand Rapids, about daylight on Thursday last week. She left home at 7 o'clock to go to the grocery, and was not seen afterwards alive. A bottle half full of whisky was found on her person. Her dog accompanied her, and remained by the body till found. The woman was respectable and not addicted to drink. The Coroner thinks the liquor might have been drugged, and will have it analyzed.

The store of Hause & Tabot, at Carleton, was entered by burglars last week, who forced open the safe and robbed it of between $500 and $600.—The burglars obtained their tools from the wagon shop of Mr. Hause, forced opened the back window of the store, which is in the Matthews hotel building, bored through the wooden shutter, and once inside appeared to have little difficulty in forcing the combination lock. The bookkeeper of the firm slept over the store, but heard nothing unusual.

Household Hints.

To Stain Wood a Mahogany Color.—Take half a pint of nitric acid, a piece of alum about the size of a Spanish nut, and as much logwood as will give the desired color.

To Remove Rust from Iron.—The easiest method of removing rust from iron is rubbing it with a rag dipped in oil of tartar. The rust will disappear immediately.

Potato Salad.—Six large cold boiled potatoes cut fine, two small heads of lettuce broken in small pieces, half a small onion cut fine, two hard boiled eggs, one pint of meat, and a dressing made of French mustard, oil, and vinegar.

Cocoanut Candy.—Grate the meat of a cocoanut, and, having ready two pounds of sifted white sugar, and the beaten whites of two eggs, also the milk of the nut, mix together and make into little cakes. In a short time the candy will be dry enough to eat.

Bone Felon.—The London Lancet suggests the following simple treatment: As soon as the disease is felt, put directly over the spot a fly-blister, about the size of your thumb nail, and let it remain for six hours, at the expiration of which time, directly under the surface of the blister, may be seen the felon, which instantly be taken out with the point of a needle, or a lancet.

The Medical Press says it is the worry about ways and means that kills; doctors themselves are worried to death by pecuniary troubles. This is an opinion worth more than many prescriptions for which a large price is paid. It is an easy thing to give advice which is hard to take, but we commend this medical counsel as good to begin the year with and to use all the year through: "Don't worry; take things quietly; the darkest night has a morning; and worry wears out the heart and life." No charge for that, but it is sound advice.

If a fish-bone or a portion of food sticks in the throat, and threatens to produce suffocation, first give a smart blow between the shoulders. This will most likely dislodge the substance. If the patient can make any attempt to swallow, put a large lump of butter in his mouth. This will help the offending substance to pass down the throat more easily. If he cannot swallow, put the finger as far down the throat as possible and endeavor to pull the bone or meat out, or tickle the throat to produce immediate vomiting. Unless there is prompt action, life may be lost.

When freshly spilled, ink can be removed from carpets by wetting in milk. Take cotton-batting and soak up all the ink that it will receive, being careful not to let it spread. Then take fresh cotton wet in milk, and sop it up carefully. Repeat this operation, changing the cotton and milk each time. After most of the ink has been taken up in this way, with fresh cotton and clean, rub the spot. Continue until all disappears; then wash the spot in clean, warm water and a little soap; rinse in clear water, and rub until nearly dry. For ink spots on marble, wood or paper, apply ammonia clear, just wetting the spot repeatedly till the ink disappears.

According to the Pharmacist, it is a frequent practice in the New York asylum for inebriates to administer to the patients at bed time a glass of milk to produce sleep, and the result is often found satisfactory, without the use of medicine. Medicine is there sometimes prescribed in milk. It has been recently stated in medical journals that lactic acid has the effect of promoting sleep by acting as a sedative, and this acid may be produced in the alimentary canal after the ingestion of milk. Can this, then, be the explanation of the action of milk on the nervous system after a long continued, excessive use of alcoholic drink? Sugar, also, is capable of being converted in the stomach, in certain morbid conditions into lactic acid; and a lump of sugar allowed to dissolve in the mouth on going to bed will frequently soothe the restless body to quiet and repose.

Boiled Apples.—A friend who knows about good things to eat, writes to us that about the nicest morsel that ever tickled the palate is boiled apples—not boiled like a potato, nor steamed like a pudding, but as follows: Place a layer of fair-skinned Baldwins, or any nice variety, in the stew pan, with about a quarter of an inch of water. Throw on about one-half cup sugar to six good-sized apples, and boil until the apples are thoroughly cooked and the sirup nearly thick enough for jelly. After one trial no one would, for any consideration, have fair-skinned apples peeled. The skins contain a very large share of the pectous—jelly-making—substances, and impart a flavor impossible to obtain otherwise." He also says: "A wise housekeeper, instead of throwing away the skins and cores of such pie apples would use them for jelly. A tumblerful of the richest sort can thus be obtained from a dozen apples. Boil the skins, etc., a few minutes, and strain. Add a little sugar to the liquid, and boil until right to turn into the tumbler."

Proof Everywhere.

If any invalid or sick person has the least doubt of the power and efficacy of Hop Bitters to cure them they can find cases exactly like their own, in their own neighborhood, with positive proof that they can be easily and permanently cured at a trifling cost—or ask your druggist or physician.

Greenwich, Feb. 11, 1880.

Hop Bitters Co.—Sirs—I was given up by the doctors to die of scrofula consumption. Two bottles of your Bitters cured me.

Leroy Brewer.

The disinfection of letters containing paper money during the height of the Russian plague panic was effected on the Prussian border by exposing them for six hours in a peculiarly constructed closed vessel to the fumes of sulphuric acid. It was not considered necessary to open or puncture the letters, since it was proved by experiment that the vapor of the acid penetrates the pores of paper, however firmly made. In the laboratory of the Berlin Board of Health, blue litmus-paper, enclosed in four thicknesses of paper, and in several envelopes tightly compressed, was intensely reddened by being subjected to the fumes of this acid.

Clark all those tracts or parcels of land situate in the township of Hudson in the county of Lenawee and state of Michigan, bounded and described as follows, to wit: "Being village lot number five (5) on Lairds addition to the village of Hudson, being situated on section nineteen in said township of Hudson. Also one other piece or parcel of land situate in the village of Hudson, county of Lenawee, and state of Michigan, described as situated on section nineteen in said township, commencing on the north line of land deeded by Ann B. Cobb to Robert Laird, and sixteen rods west of the west division of fractions on said section nineteen and running thence northerly and parallel with the line of fractions till it strikes the southern angle line of land deeded by Harvey Colton to [illegible] last line of land now owned by John W. Fisher, thence southerly till it reaches the southwest corner of said Fisher's lot; thence westerly on the south line of said Fisher's lot to a point four rods west of the line first above described and mentioned as a part of the boundary; thence southerly on a line parallel with the first described line to the north line of Robert Laird's land at a point four rods west of the place of beginning; thence easterly on said Laird's north line to the place of beginning. To secure the payment of one hundred and twenty-two dollars and the interest to accrue thereon, said mortgage was on the 22d day of April, 1855, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for Lenawee county in Liber D of mortgages on pages 276, 277 and 278. This mortgage was on the 25th day of October, 1867, duly assigned by said Ellhu L. Clark to John M. Osborn, which assignment was on the 25th day of October, 1867, duly recorded in said Register's office in Liber 50 of mortgages, on pages 768 and 769. Default has been made in the conditions of said mortgage by the non-payment of the moneys due thereon by which the power of sale therein contained has become operative. There is now claimed to be due and unpaid on said mortgage the sum of two hundred and fourteen and seventy-five hundredths dollars, and no proceeding has been instituted at law or in equity to recover said sum or any part thereof. Notice is therefore hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage contained, and the statute in such case made and provided, I will sell at public vendue to the highest bidder at the front door of Dean's opera house in the city of Adrian, in said county of Lenawee, (that being the place of holding the circuit court in and for said county,) on the first day of May, 1882, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, the land above and in said mortgage described or so much thereof as may be necessary to satisfy the amount then due on said mortgage, the costs of this foreclosure and sale and a reasonable sum of money for an attorney fee as provided for in said mortgage in case of foreclosure.

M'lle Louise Hyers,

What the Cincinnati Gazette has to Say.

The entertainment given by the Hyers Sisters, on Tuesday evening, at the opera house, was brilliantly successful. The audience filled the house comfortably, and it is estimated that one thousand persons were in attendance. The troupe presented in a thoroughly satisfactory manner the musical drama, "Out of Bondage," giving life like and accurate scenes of negro life in slavery, in freedom, and in the ranks of cultured artists. All the male characters were well sustained. Fred Lyons' mouth may well be advertised as the biggest in the business. It is immense. The female characters were all good. Louise Hyers as Kaboolah was an amusing gypsy. The musical star of the evening was Madah Hyers, the soprano. Her singing evoked a perfect thunder of applause. In the duet with Louise, "I'll Sustain the Furious Encounter," from Il Trovatore, she made a good impression, but it was in her rendering of the Cavitana from Traviata, a brilliant solo, that she showed the remarkable range, culture and purity of her voice. In this selection she sang without effort, with perfect distinctness and volume, E flat above the staff.

The Hyers Sisters and Troupe, the California Vocalists, who were so well received at the last entertainments, will again appear. The troupe is especially successful in the rendition of those sweet, harmonious, but yet quaint and wild melodies peculiar to the devotees of their race, and known as camp meeting songs, which they give with much more finish, and less of that harshness and almost uncouthness of the various bands of colored singers who have visited our city. The Hyers Sisters, the female members of the quartette, are not unknown here, and have received the highest commendations wherever they have appeared. Their naturally fine abilities have been greatly improved by culture, which is evinced in their singing. The instrumental portion of their entertainment is furnished by a trained orchestra, and the program combines a pleasing variety.—Boston Evening Transcript.

Fred Lyons with the Hyers Sisters Combination, is the best banjo player, the funniest comedian and the biggest-mouthed nigger that ever crossed the East river.—Brooklyn Union.

Verily, in the Hyers Sisters, the musical world has something in which to take pride.—Brooklyn Daily Argus.

AROUND THE COUNTY.

BROOKLYN.

Visiting relatives is seldom interesting except to those engaged in the business, and they lose enthusiasm when the bottom falls out of the road. The nearest route to China is between Allens and Quincy. You can drop through most anywhere, and the reason I did not go below is because I started to see Henry Sisson, the pioneer of Evans lake, and he does not reside among celestials. Though past eighty years of age, and health impaired, he directs his farm work, reads a great deal and has not lost any of his old sharpness in politics. He lives as much in to-day as younger people, and his memory is considered disagreeably good by those who have undone to-day whatever they can put off until to-morrow. He does not trouble himself about that shadowy to-morrow, so near dawning, but says, when he is wanted he shall be called for, and should be ashamed to live so long and have things all out of sorts.

The latter is the style inaugurated at Brooklyn just now, and it will take a long time to bring order out of the brick heaps and stone piles that are growing daily in the streets. Besides stores a methodist chapel is to be built, and a young temperance lodge has sprouted among the debris. Two clergymen have undertaken to cultivate it, and we hope it may live thro' the summer's expected drought. In fact there is an immense amount of expectation in market and costs so little one can afford to invest largely.

CLINTON.

Mr. David Brooks is on the jury at Detroit this week.

Bert Tate is visiting friends in Tuscola county.

Mrs. Dr. Newcomb, of Blissfield, is visiting her daughter, Mrs. J. T. Clark.

Several Clinton people went down to Adrian to hear Beecher last Saturday evening.

Mr. Tunison, of Morenci, Mr. Day, of Adrian, and Libbie Blanchard are visiting at Rev. J. W. Payne's.

Dr. Alabaster, of Ann Arbor, lectured Tuesday evening of this week at the Town Hall on "The Nile, the Jordan and the Tiber."

Mr. John Smith was taken sick on Saturday night with a severe chill and bleeding of the lungs. It was feared at first that his illness might prove quite serious, but through the prompt attention of his physician, Dr. A. F. Tuttle, he is now able to be out again.

Miss Ida Howell has sold her millinery goods to Miss Mary Kilpatrick and Sue Brown. They will carry on the business in the Chandler block.

Mr. B. O. Randall has been in poor health for a few weeks past, so that he has been unable to be at his place of business but a few hours each day. We all miss his eccentric greetings as we enter the drug store, and hope that ere long he will be able to resume his position.

The Sunday evening services at the Episcopal church were somewhat disturbed by the throwing of stones against the building. It was done by those who evidently did not realize the enormity of the offense they were committing nor the penalty attached. One who would lower himself to such an act is not worthy of tolerance in the society of decent people.

One of our enterprising business men the other day insanely imagined that some one was trying to ruin his business by buying a few fish. The abused one lowered the price of oysters to twenty-five cents thereby "teaching them to take business out of his hands." But the one who had so innocently dealt in fresh fish was not to be outdone and good naturedly put his oysters at twenty cents. The sale was rapidly increasing, making about all the business two or three could well manage in waiting upon customers and attending to the bulletin board. When the first mentioned gentleman found on his neighbors board the mark "5 cts. per qt," disgust and defeat were plainly marked upon his countenance and he walked inside to the amusement of the lookers-on.

MACON CENTER.

George Kemp had a valuable horse drop dead in the harness one day last week.

L. B. Stewart, son of Ira Stewart, has rented the old homestead of H. L. Stewart for the coming season.

C. Shaler had a horse drop dead in the harness on his way home from Tecumseh last Monday.

The directors of Macon Grange hall will meet at 1 o'clock P. M., Monday, March 13.

"But for the reserve of a life lease," or words to that effect C. Mead would have sold his farm to 'Cap' Cook.

J. W. Badger, M. D., of Big Rapids, has been visiting friends in Summerfield, Macon, Tecumseh and Franklin the past week.

Mrs. Joseph Spaulding, of Franklin, is in a very critical condition from inflammation of the lungs.

Nathaniel Bowen, of Tecumseh, has been working up one of the forest kings, a large oak, which measured 6 feet across the stump, and made 45 cords of stove wood.

If bank failures were held to be embezzlement to the amount of liabilities over assets, there would be less failures and greater safety to depositors.

David Coryell had the largest crowd at his auction last week that was ever known to be at an auction before in this town.

Mr. & Mrs. F. N. Miller will start for Whitehall, Muskegon county, next week Thursday, where they intend to stay during the summer. Frank Aten will probably go with them.

Frank Pocklington has commenced the mason work on the foundation walls of M. Yates' tool and carriage barn.

Dyspepsia Cured.

Baltimore, Md., Feb. 14, 1881.

I tried your valuable medicine, Brown's Iron Bitters, for dyspepsia, indigestion, &c., and was cured by its use after three leading physicians of this city failed by their prescriptions to give me relief. After eating, before taking the Iron Bitters, I suffered with a full feeling about the breast, with headache all the time, bowels very irregular, and generally used up. At night, when I got home from work, I thought I could not last until the next morning. I now feel like a new man. J. V. Howser.

Those who try for the prize must send 20 cts. in silver (no postage stamps taken) with their answer, for which they will receive the April number of the Monthly, in which will be published the name and address of the winner of the prize, with the correct answer thereto. Cut this out; it may be worth $20.00 to you. Address Rutledge Publishing Co., Easton Pa.

Ashburnham, Mass. Jan. 14, 1880.

I have been sick over two years.—They all gave me up as past cure. I tried the most skilful physicians, but they did not reach the worst part.—The lungs and heart would fill up every night and distress me, and my throat was very bad. I told my children I should never die in peace until I had tried Hop Bitters. I have taken two bottles. They have helped me very much indeed. I am now well.—There was a lot of sick folks here who have seen how they helped me, and they used them and are cured, and feel as thankful as I do that there is so valuable a medicine made.

FROM DELAWARE.

McDONOUGH, DEL., March 1, '82.

DEAR EDITOR:—

One more winter is numbered with the past. The joyous notes of the birds proclaim the arrival of spring. Now we farmers of the "Diamond State" will make the start for the season's work; the success of a new beginner in this old country remains yet to be told. I do not expect any great achievements for the first year at least, but trust by living and learning to be able to make my farms produce my bread and butter, and if my peach crop fails not at least one thousand bushels from my orchard.—You know that I have been quite a traveler in my native land, and I think I can safely say that I have seen no more beautiful or productive farms east of the Alleghany mountains than are found in this peninsula. The nature of the soil is easy of cultivation, and the situation offers more good markets in a smaller radius than are found anywhere in this country. The peninsula has an area of about 4,000,000 of acres, and contains 400,000 inhabitants, but there are several thousands of acres not under cultivation, with many thousand more capable of a much greater productiveness than is now the case, because of the large acreage too frequently found in single farms. Very many of the large land owners are willing, even anxious to sell a portion of their farms at reasonable prices to northern men, and I think the chances to obtain a home here are as good as any locality I have ever visited.

Whether farming will pay here depends upon the farmers. As in all other lands some make a success, others failure. I have the statement of one northern man, which I believe to be truthful as a sample I give it you. He bought a farm of one hundred and forty-five acres for the small sum of forty-five hundred dollars, and on easy terms. The improvements on the place were merely nominal, but its nearness to railroads and water communication enabled its owner to enjoy, from the first, all the comforts and advantages of an old settlement. According to his statement, and it was very modestly given, within seven years after his purchase the farm was paid for as well as all the improvements required on a well conducted place. His wheat sales have averaged a thousand bushels a year, while the proceeds from his fruit garden amount to six hundred and fifty, and from his domestic animals not less than four hundred and fifty dollars more, making an annual total, after supporting his family and farm help, of more than two thousand dollars. I do not pretend to say that all farmers will be equally successful; still you know the old saying, "What has been done can be done again."

New York, Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore can be reached in a very few hours, and this gives a marketable value to the farm products of this region unsurpassed and probably unequalled by any other agricultural spot in the country. Delaware, and the Peninsula, is the great orchard, and early fruit and vegetable garden for Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, Boston and the smaller cities in the eastern and middle states. Everything that is raised has the advantages of the best markets of the country, and judging from what I can see and learn I can discover no good reason why farming and fruit raising will not pay here.

You can purchase any priced lands you may wish, from $25 to $150 per acre. Very good farms may be had for from $40 to $75 per acre, with fair improvements, within a few miles of railroad and steamboat. I think one mistake made by the farmers here is in neglecting to sow enough clover, and depending too much on manufactured fertilizers, which has a tendency to burn up the soil if not carefully used. I have no doubt but that the use of lime, marl, marsh muck and peat, to get a good stand of clover to be turned under, is what is wanted and would be most beneficial to the soil. Lime is obtained from Pennsylvania limestone and from oyster shells burnt in kilns. Marl—this inestimable gift to the farmer, so rich in silicate of potash and iron, is found in large quantities. Marsh muck and peat abounds in all the tide-water sections.

HOME TESTIMONY.

Burlington, Vt., Jan. 26, 1883,

Messrs. Henry, Johnston & Lord: I have used Downs' Elixir for many years and regard it as a superior remedy for coughs and colds, one that I could not part with in my family.

Jo. D. Hatch, Mayor.

That old-established remedy, Downs' Elixir, still more than holds its own in the public estimation, despite sharp and active competition. It is a home remedy, and in this locality needs no words of praise from us, so well and favorably known is it. It is the standard remedy for coughs, colds and all throat troubles with great numbers of our people, and their continued use and unsolicited recommendations of it speaks volumes in its favor. To those who are unfamiliar with its merits we take pleasure in commending it as the best and most reliable medicine of the kind in the market.—Burlington, Vt, Free Press, January 26, 1882.

Burlington, Vt.

I subscribe to the efficiency of Downs' Elixir. It has been a standard remedy for coughs and colds in my family for years.

J. A. Arthur,
Deputy Customs Collector.

Manchester, Vt., Dec. 28, 1881.

I have used N. H. Downs' Elixir in my family for years, and for coughs, colds, croup and affections of the lungs always find it a sure and speedy remedy. It is not a humbug, like some of the advertised nostrums.

R. Howard, Judge of Probate.

Burlington, Vt., Jan. 26, 1882.

I have used Downs' Elixir for forty years, and consider it a safe and valuable medicine in all cases of coughs, colds and for any pulmonary trouble. I always fall back on to this old remedy when the symptoms are alarming, and it has never disappointed me.

STEP BY STEP.

BY J. G. HOLLAND.

Heaven is not reached by a single bound,
But we build the ladder by which we rise
From the lowly earth to the vaulted skies,
And we mount to its summit round by round.

I count these things to be grandly true,
That a noble deed is a step toward God,
Lifting the soul from the common sod,
To a purer air and a nobler view.

We rise by the things that are under our feet,
By what we have mastered in greed and gain,
By the pride deposed, and the passion slain,
And the vanquished ill we heartly meet,

We hope, we resolve, we aspire, we trust,
We are [illegible] that
But our hopes grow weary, and, ere the night,
Our lives are trailing in sordid dust.

Wings for the angels, but feet for the men!
We must borrow the wings to find the way,
We may hope, and resolve, and aspire, and pray
But our feet must rise, or we fall again.

Only in dreams is the ladder thrown
From the weary earth to the sapphire wall.
But the dreamer departs, and the visions fall,
And the sleeper wakes on a pillow of stone.

Heaven is not reached by a single bound,
But we build the ladder by which we rise
From the lowly earth to the vaulted skies,
And we mount to the summit round by round.

How a Man Hangs Out Clothes.

BY KATE THORN.

Once in a while there is a man who loves, yes, loves, to help his wife!

We honor him when we see him.

We wish him long life and freedom from rheumatism, chilblains, and toothache.

We trust he will never be baldheaded.

And we hope his wife will love him and cherish him as the apple of her eye, and never "pooh! pooh!" at him when he complains of not feeling well, or fancies he has got a spell of "that old liver trouble" coming on.

But at the same time, we cannot help laughing at him when he hangs out the week's washing.

It is always very cold weather when a man hangs out the clothes. He does it to help his wife, or because the snow flutters under her dress and wets her ankles and gives her the neuralgia.

It is "awful" good in him to do it; as we said in the beginning, we admire him for it, and we hope we shall be forgiven for laughing at his way of doing it.

He takes the basket under one arm, and tips it up an angle of a little more than forty-five degrees, (everything, if you have noticed, is always tipped at an angle of just forty-five degrees when anybody speaks of it,) and he takes the clothes-pin basket in the other hand and trips down the back steps, whistling, to show how cheerfully he is helping his wife, and he swings the pin basket, and out hop three or four pins, and scatter in four different directions. He makes a flying leap for them, and the clothes basket loses its balance, and away goes a nightcap and a "bosomed" shirt, and two towels into the mud!

His wife, who is watching him from the window, and women always watch a man on such occasions to keep him straight with their valuable advice—she yells out to him in frenzy:

Charles Jenkins! what does possess you? You'll get them clothes all down in the mud! That's just like a man!"

Nothing distracts a woman like having the washing get muddied. The burning down of a barn, or the death of the favorite cow, would be nothing to it. It is something no woman we have ever seen can bear with equanimity.

The "helpful" man scrambles up the wet drygoods, and chucks them into the basket. A little dirt, more or less, isn't much to the thinking of a man, unless it happens to be on his cuffs or shirt bosom.

He reaches the line in triumph, and begins the business of hanging out with vim. He wants his wife to see how expert he is! He wants to show her that he can do it just as neatly and expeditiously as she can. For there are very few men who do not privately entertain the opinion that they can do any kind of woman's work a little better than the women themselves if they only have a mind to.

He braces himself, for it is generally icy under a clothes-line, puts three pins in his mouth to have them handy, and makes a dive into the basket. The first thing he brings out is a pillow-case. He puts that on, a little crosswise, and pins it on both sides. Then he gets out a pair of drawers and holds them up, considering which way they ought to go. Waistband up, of course—that is the way they are worn, he argues, and he puts them on, and pins them, and surveys them with intense satisfaction.

"Charles!" cries his watchful wife from the window, "Do pull them drawers' legs down even! One of 'em is a foot shorter than the other, and do, dear, hang the pillow-cases next to each other. Strange that a man don't know anything!"

He stands back, a night gown in one hand and a table-cloth in the other, and wants to know what difference it makes!

Won't they dry just as well if one leg is longer than the other?

And then he gives the shortest leg of the garment a vicious twitch, and it has frozen by this time, and it tears as easily as paper, and off it comes just above the knee, and the man who is hanging out clothes feels like swearing, and casts Of course a man would hang on to anything with his arms, and why not his shirt?

He hastily fishes out a pillow-case, and hangs it over the demoralized garment, and then he pins on the nightgown, and then two aprons, and then a sheet, and then a shirt, which he hangs by the sleeves, and thinks it looks well. a furtive glance at the house, and is glad to see that his wife has left her post of observation at the window for a moment, and is not aware of the catastrophe.

"Charles!" cries his wife, "you've hung that shirt wrong end up! Whoever saw a shirt hung up by the sleeves?"

"Who wants to stand a shirt on its head?" he retorts. "Let me alone, Mary Jane! I guess I know how to hang out clothes!"

Then he seized a bed-spread, but he had been so long doing his work that the clothes in the basket have frozen fast to it, and he tugs and tugs; and still the spread and the basket do not part company.

He lays out his strength, and up comes the spread, but the sudden relaxation of resistance on its part is too much for him, and he flops over backward, and his feet land on the pile of clothes yet unhung, and his head strikes the clothes-post, and the girls over to Brown's, who are watching him, set up a feminine squeal of delight and amusement, and he feels as though he should like to tear somebody or something into inch pieces! And he kicks the basket, and it hits the clothes-pin basket, and upsets that and he gets up and rubs the blood from his hand where he cut it with the ice in falling, and his wife yells out in no amiable tone of voice:

"Have you torn that spread, Charles Jenkins?"

And he answers something which would not look well printed in a moral newspaper, and she gives him a little Christian advice, and tells him that she wouldn't risk her soul by swearing, and she says she wishes she had hung out them clothes herself. Indeed she does!

He is sullen now, and he does not heed suggestions any more. He just gets the things on the line as he pleases, and when the job is done, that clothes-line is a spectacle for a woman's eyes, and every woman who passes down the back street that day will turn round and look at it, and laugh to herself, and know just as well as if she were told that a man hung out the clothes.

And Charles' fingers will feel like sticks of cordwood to him by the time he is done, and it will take him half a day to thaw them out properly and get the tingle out of them.

But he is satisfied in spirit, for he believes that he has proved to the women of the vicinity, and to Mary Jane in particular, that he can hang out clothes as well as any woman in the world. Yes, sir!

And just as soon as dinner is out of the way, Mary Jane rigs on her leggings and rubbers, and puts on her mittens, and goes out and changes those shirts and things all over and picks up the pins out of the snow that he scattered round, and finds out about the leg of the drawers and says to herself that she'll hang the clothes out herself hereafter, if she goes over her head in the snow!

Vacation.

The dry goods clerk receives permission to go off into the country for two weeks to rusticate. He receives his fortnight's pay in advance, and is as happy as a butterfly in the bosom of a tulip as he glides out of the city. He generally goes to visit some farmer relative, for then he can have all the fresh milk he wants, and besides won't be obliged to pay any board. The latter is the feature which makes the farm preferable to a fashionable watering place. He never visits the farmer a second time, as he is discovered to be a philosopher of no mean order. He tells the young man that as he has been confined in a close store for a year, all he wants to brace him up is to dig a little, so he takes him out and introduces him to a two-acre lot of potatoes which needs hoeing. Of course he can't decline and offend his host, so he shoulders the hoe and goes to work in a manner which would lead a casual observer to imagine him to be committing murder under special contract. The way he makes the hoe fly around his head and the number of potatoes he chops in half ought to be warning to the agriculturist to call him off. This he would do if he knew the damage that was being done; but he doesn't—he only sees the hoe fly around, and that makes him smile and exclaim:

"Well, now, I swan if he aint a gosh-blamed lively boy."

After that he is asked to chop some wood and turn a grindstone for an hour or two, the farmer asserting that these things are extremly healthful in their tendencies, and withal quite the thing for a young man who works in a store all the year.

On the following day he is asked to help fix a stone well, and, being rather slender and light, is selected as the most available person around the place to be lowered down the well to fasten the bucket to the chain.

After he has been in the country for about two days he begins to sigh for the city, and to be back again in a store in charge of a cross-grained employer with yellow hair. He is by that time completely used up, and wonders if he has fallen down stairs or been run over by a lumber wagon. He thinks even a residence in Zululand, with fever and ague thrown in, would be sweeter. He feels like asking the farmer to pension him. In an ecstasy of despair he gets his brother to telegraph to him saying there is a death in the family and he must return immediately; and as he departs, the farmer remarks that he doesn't seem to "take on" much, and that he is about the happiest mourner he ever saw in his life.

Breeding Turkeys.

There is no branch of the poultry business that yields so large a profit, if properly managed, as turkey-raising; yet breeders rarely undertake it without a feeling of uncertainty as to success. There are many different varieties, and each one has strong advocates; the bronze is very popular, on account of its size and beauty, and especially from the fact of its being a native of America. From a trio of healthy turkeys of almost any breed quite a large flock can be raised in a single season, care being used as to food and general treatment. There are a few rules that will do to follow closely in turkey breeding; a good one is never to allow young turkeys not comfortably clad in feathers to run out while the dew is on the grass; for a chill, however slight, is most sure to be fatal. During the day, they should be allowed to roam, for turkeys cannot bear confinement, but long before nightfall pen them up in a roomy coop, after a liberal allowance of food—as much as they will eat, and no more—for to leave food lying about in reach of the brood, to grow stale and sour, will always result in feeble, undersized birds, if they survive the treatment at all. They are fond of milk, and should be regularly given it if convenient; chopped onions, bread crumbs, corn bread, cheese curds, or almost any clean, sweet food will insure health so far as feeding can possibly do. It is better for turkeys to be hatched early in the season, but at that time there is so much to contend with in the way of cold nights and wet days, that the breeder may well be proud of successful rearing of an early brood of young turkeys.—American Stockman.

Cultivation of House-Plants.

Professor Maynard says comparatively few persons who cultivate window plants are more than partially successful in their efforts. Among the reasons for this want of success may be given these: a want of knowledge of the conditions of plant growth; a want of time to care for them properly; lack of the proper temperature and a pure, moist atmosphere. First, very few persons realize that plants may be injured by too much or too little water, and fail to understand when the soil is too wet or too dry. Plants, as well as animals, must have pure air for a healthy growth. Those persons who are successful in growing plants have an intense love for their pets, and soon learn to detect anything wrong in their condition, and apply the remedy. Second, plants require constant care. Their condition must be closely watched, and the soil not be allowed to get too dry, nor be watered too much. Their condition must be known at all times; and if the green fly appears, it must be destroyed at once by crushing, or by dipping in tobacco water about the color of strong tea, or strong soapsuds, rinsing the plant carefully after fifteen or twenty minutes. If the red spiders appear, destroy them by sponging the under side of the leaf with cold soapsuds. Their presence is an indication that the atmosphere is too dry. If the mealy bugs are found, they should be destroyed by touching with alchohol, or by brushing off with a soft, dry brush. If mildew attacks roses or verbenas, it must be destroyed by washing or dipping in a solution of lime and sulphur, made by boiling one pound of caustic lime with one pound of sulphur in two gallons of water. This should be allowed to se tle, and then kept in bottles ready for use. In using it, take one teaspoonful to one quart of water. One treatment in any of these cases may not be sufficient, and must be repeated as often as necessary. Eternal vigilance is the only price of success. Third, according to the temperature required for the healthy growth of different plants, they may be divided into two classes, namely: Those that grow well at an average temperature of 50° Fah., that is ranging from 40° to 60°, and those that require a higher temperature, an average of 70° rangfng from 60° to 70°.

The first class will include geraniums, carnations, centaureas, camelias, azaleas, abutilons, argeratums, callas, sweet alyssum, English ivies, smilax, mignonette, hyacinths, primulas, stevias, petunias, verbenas, lobelias, and roses. In the second class are begonias, bouvardias, epiphylums, and all cacti, fuchias, gloxinias. German ivies, heliotrope, torrenias, pileas, and roses. Roses are included in both classes, as they will succeed well under both conditions.

Plants grow much better where the temperature runs lower at night than during the day. It never should go below 40° Fah. in the first case, or below 50° in the second case. If plants stand near a window, a screen should be made by pasting papers to a frame, similar to that used for mosquito screens, placing it between the plants and the window every night. A screen made in this way may be inserted in a moment, and may consist of several thicknesses of paper.

A moist atmosphere is indispensable to the healthy growth of plants, and is obtained by keeping the pan in the furnace filled with water, or an urn or some other vessel upon the stove. The atmosphere must be free from sulphurous gases, and to accomplish this end the back damper in the stove must be kept open enough to allow its escape, and the window raised a little every day for a short time when the temperature outside will allow.

If small plants, taken from the greenhouse, be carefully potted in suitable soil, placed in a room with a somewhat moist atmosphere, free from poisonous gases, carefully watered, exposed to the sunlight a part of the day, no insects allowed on them, the temperature kept as directed, they will grow and well repay the labor of caring for them, and homes be made brighter and happier by the presence of an abundance of flowers.

Marriage, Health and Morals.

It has been shown from statistics, that in general married people have less mortality than the unmarried or widowed. Among the facts indicating the relation between marriage and physical health, it has been proved by M. Jansens, of Brussels, that at all ages widowers are twice as liable to phthisis as other men, but that married people are generally more liable to this disease than celibates. The law is constant for women; with men it holds good only before 25 years of age and after 45. Such facts and their meanings are discussed by M. Bertillon in a paper following the one on "Statistics of Marriage," which we noticed lately. M. Bertillon goes on to show the influence of the family state on the morals. Not only do married people die less than others, but they show less tendency to suicide, to mental derangement, to assassination, to theft, or other evils or crimes. Widowers commit suicide much oftener than married men. As regards crime generally, they may be said to rank between the single (above) and the married (below). It is remarkable that men who have families commit less crime (including suicide) than those (married men) who have not, and the same applies to widowers. The presence of children recalls them, doubtless to a sense of duty. The influence of children further appears to be greater than that of a wife, and it keeps back married men from crime more than widowers. In all social situations women are found to be much less disposed to crime than men, and the presence of children greatly influences the morality of married women. Those who have children show only about half the tendency to crime of the others. Widows, on the other hand, seem to be more often inspired with criminal thoughts where they have children than where they are without them. Is this from misery, or some other cause? As regards suicide, the presence of a young family exercises a peculiarly well marked influence. Both in the case of married men and in that of widowers this presence diminishes by about one-half the tendency to commit suicide. Women are less disposed to suicide than men; but, whether in the married state or widows, they show much less tendency to take away their own lives where they have children than where they have not. Some of these results are contrary to common notions.—London Times.

A Lazy Man's Views.

Let us analyze this lying in bed a little further. I maintain that, in the mere fact of lying in bed, there is something healthy and recuperative to the system. The wheels of life are oiled and eased. The proper and legitimate purpose of stopping in bed is to go to sleep. There is no tonic or medicine in the world like sleep. The more sleep the brain gets, the better does the brain work. All great brain-workers have been great sleepers. Sir Walter Scott could never do with less than ten hours. A fool may want eight hours, as George III. said, but the philosopher wants nine. The men who have been the greatest generals are the men who could sleep it well. Thus it was with both Wellington and Napoleon. The greatest speakers in the House of Commons have been men who can go to sleep as much as they like. This explained the juvenility of the aged Palmerston. There is a man who has been Atty. General, whom I have seen bury his face in his hands over his desk and sleep soundly until his own case should come on. "Sleep," says the Greek proverb, "is the remedy for every disease. If he sleeps well, he will do well." A friend told me that he treated himself for a fever. He went to bed with a large pitcher of lemonade by his side. He drank, and slept, slept and drank, and slept himself well again. When you take to your bed, get all the sleep you can, even though, to quote Dick Swiveller's saying, you have to pay double for a double bedded room, confessing that you have taken a most unreasonable amount of sleep out of a single bed. You will have a whole store of recuperative energy. Even if you cannot sleep, still keep your bed. There is no more pestilent heresy than that you should get up immediately when you awake. It it is the early riser who catches the worm, the worm is a great idiot in rising still earlier in order to be caught. If you do not sleep by lying in bed, you get rest. You secure the fallow ground which will hereafter produce a good harvest. Sleep is of course the proper enjoyment for a bed, but if you don't sleep you can lie and read. I don't believe that the man who gets up really learns or does more than the man who lies in bed. Of all the sleep in the world there is none so good as what you get in the way of treasure-trove, after the usual time of waking, when in point of fact, you have given up the expectation of getting any more sleep. As for "being called," as the saying goes, that is simply a relic of the barbarism of our ancestors. I should quarrel with any man who would presume "to call" me. One of the main beauties of an occasional day in bed is that you get an extra stock of sleep, which goes to the credit side of sanitary account.

Value of Soup as Food.

The value of soup as food cannot be over estimated. In times of scarcity and distress, when the question has arisen of how to feed the largest number of persons upon the least quantity of food, the aliment chosen has always been soup. There are two reasons for this: first, by the addition of water to the ingredients used, we secure the aid of this important agent in distributing nutrition equally throughout the blood, to await final absorption; and second, we gain that sense of repletion to the satisfaction of hunger—the fact being acknowledged that the sensation we call hunger is often allayed by the presence of even innutritious substances in the stomach. Good soup is literally the juice of any ingredient from which it is made, the extract of the meat, grains or vegetables which compose it. Even the most economical soups, eaten with bread, will satisfy the hunger of the hardest worker. The absolute nutritive value of soup depends, of course, upon its ingredients; and these can easily be chosen in reference to the maintenance of health. For initance, the pot liquor in which meat has been boiled needs only the addition of a few dumplings or cereals and seasoning to form a perfect nutriment. That produced from skin and bones can be made equally palatable and nutritious by boiling with it a few vegetables and sweet herbs, and some rice, barley or oatmeal. Even the gelatinous residue produced by long-continued boiling, without the presence of any foreign matter, is a useful emollient application to the inflamed mucous surfaces in some diseases, while it affords at the same time the degree of distention necessary to prevent flatulency. The time required to make the most palatable and nutritious soup is short. Lean meat should be chopped fine, placed in cold water, in the proportion of a pint to each pound, slowly heated and thoroughly skimmed. Five minutes' boiling will extract from the meat every particle of nutriment and flavor. The liquor can then be strained off, seasoned and eaten with bread, biscuit and vegetables. Peas or beans boiled and added to the soup make it the most perfect food for sustaining health and strength. It is the pure juice of the meat, and contains all its savory and life-giving principles.

Mother Died of Salt Rheum.

J. W. Adams, Newark, Ohio, says: "Cuticura Remedies are the greatest medicines on earth. Had the worst case of Salt Rheum in this country. My mother had it twenty years, and in fact died from it. I believe Cuticura would have saved her life. My arms, breast and head were covered for three years, which nothing relieved or cured until I used the Cuticura Remedies.

SLANG.—Very precise and proper people are continually denouncing some of the vigorous terms in use as low and vulgar, because to them they seem to be new, when in fact it is only a restoration of good old English. Shakespere made one of his characters reject an improbable story with the brief reply, "It's too thin!" And in one of his sonnets, in which he implores his mistress to discard a friend who has supplanted himself in her good graces, he begs her to "fire him out!"

It is useless to deny that the brightest and fairest fall easy victims to consumption, and equally fruitless to ignore the fact that decline has its origin in many cases in neglected catarrh. Sanford's Radical Cure is a pure, sweet balsamic specific.

TO THE AFFLICTED.

Since the introduction of Kellogg's Columbian Oil it has made more permanent cures and given better satisfaction on Kidney Complaints and Rheumatism than any known remedy. Its continued series of wonderful cures in all climates has made it known as a safe and reliable agent to employ against all aches and pains, which are the forerunners of more serious disorders. It acts speedily and surely, always relieving suffering and often saving life. The protection it affords by its timely use in rheumatism, Kidney affection, and all aches and pains, wounds, cramping pains, cholera morbus, diarrhoea, coughs, colds, catarrh, and disorders among children, makes it an invaluable remedy to be kept always on hand in every home. No person can afford to be without it, and those who have once used it never will. It is absolutely certain in its remedial effects, and will always cure when cures are possible. Call at C. A. Wright & Co.'s and get a memorandum book giving more full details of the curative properties of this wonderful medicine.

Children at School.

An exchange says: "We believe that as a rule children are sent to school at too early an age. This subject has recently attracted the attention of physicians in the eastern states. The Medical Committee which made an examination of the health of the school children in Providence, hold that pupils are taken too young; that the vitiated air of the school rooms causes consumption; that epidemic diseases are caught there; that the premature development of the brain causes nervous diseases; that the young minds are crammed with unintelligible studies, and that the method is too artificial. The committee hold that children should not be admitted to school under the age of seven, and that the hours of confinement and mental effort should be shortened.

Farmers and Mechanics.

If you wish to avoid great danger and trouble, besides a no small bit of expense, at this season of the year, you should take prompt steps to keep disease from your household. The system should be cleansed, blood purified, stomach and bowels regulated, and prevent and cure diseases arising from Spring malaria. We know of nothing that will so perfectly and surely do this as Electric Bitters, and at the trifling cost of fifty cents a bottle.—Exchange. Sold by

Sleep at Will.

Sit down in an easy position, relaxing all the muscles of the body, and let the head drop forward upon the breast, as low as it will fall without forcing it. Sit quietly this way for a few minutes, freeing all the powers of the body, and a restful, drowsy feeling will ensue, which will, if not disturbed, lead to refreshing sleep. Stiffness of any part of the body must be avoided, and it is well to bend the head forward after lying down, rather than to keep it straight or throw it back upon the pillow. The writer suffered several years from sleeplessness caused by severe pain and nervousness, and was taught the above by a physician of great experience and ability, and found through it complete relief. Many persons similarly affected within the writers' knowledge have tried it, and always with good results.

I caught a severe cold, and remembering you told me to use "Downs' Elixir," I bought a bottle and in less than three days my cough and sore throat had vanished! It's good.

POSITIVELY CURED BY

Benson's Capcine Porous Plasters.

Reasons Why they are Preferred to All Other Porous Plasters or External Remedies:

First.

Because they possess all the merit of the strengthening porous plaster, and contain in addition thereto the newly discovered powerful and soothing vegetable combination which acts with increased rubefacient, stimulating, sedative and counter irritant effects.

Second.

Because they are a genuine pharmaceutical preparation, and so recognized by the profession.

Third.

Because they are the only plasters that relieve pain at once.

Fourth.

Because they will positively cure diseases which other remedies will not even relieve.

Fifth.

Because over 5000 physicians and druggists have voluntarily testified that they are superior to all other plasters or medicines for external use.

Sixth.

Because the manufacturers have received the only medals ever given for porous plasters.

OUR CHIP BASKET

It is well to be deaf when the slanderer begins to talk.

Self-sacrifice, even when misdirected, still self-sacrifice.

Keep aloof from sadness, for sadness sickness of soul.

Our acts make or mar us; we are children of our own deeds.

To-morrow is the day on which lazy folks work and fools reform.

The best sort of revenge is to be unlike him who does the injury.

Aptness is the spur of noble minds, the end and aim of weak ones.

To know how to listen is a great art; it is to know how to gain instruction from every one.

Don't judge a man by his failure in life, for many a man fails because he is too honest to succeed.

If you sweep your own door-steps clean you will have little time to criticize those of your neighbors.

A man can profess more religion in fifty minutes than he can practice in fifty years by working hard.

Make a journey every day to three mountains: Go to Sinai, and see your sins; go to Calvary, and behold the Lamb of God; go to Zion, and behold the heavenly city.

I have found nothing yet which requires more courage and independence than to rise even a little but decidedly above the par of the religious world around us. Surely, the way in which we commonly go on is not the way of self-denial, sacrifice and cross-bearing which the New Testament talks of.

A gentleman was one day relating to a Quaker a tale of deep distress, and concluded very pathetically by saying "I could not help but feel for him." "Verily, friend," replied the Quaker, "thou didst right in that thou didst feel for thy neighbor; but didst thou feel in the right place—didst thou feel in thy pocket?"

Now, what is the meaning of the word chasm? Pupil: "It is an opening. Teacher: "Favor me with an example." Pupil: "The milliners have a chasm at the beginning of the season.

Schoolmistress (just beginning a nice improving lesson upon minerals to the juniors:) "Now, what are the principal things we get out of the earth?" Youthful Angler, aged four, (confidentially:) "Worms."

Astronomy v. Gastronomy.—"Julius," said a Brooklyn gentleman to his colored servant, don't you enjoy the astronomical phenomena these fine evenings?" "Dunno, Sah," responded the darky; "mush-melons are my favorite fruit."

The clergyman in a certain town, as the custom is, having published the banns of matrimony between two persons, was followed by the clerk's reading the hymn beginning with these words: "Deluded souls, that dream of heaven!"

"What did you do then?" asked Colonel George, after badgering a witness in the Lowell railroad case, at Salem. "I went to the rescue, like a lawyer for a man's pocket-book," replied the witness, and the retort was enjoyed all around.

A clergyman, preaching a sermon on death, concluded with the following observation: "But even death, my brethren, so well deserved by mankind for their sins, the wisdom of Providence has, in its paternal kindness, put at the end of our existence; for only think what life would be worth if death were at the beginning!"

An old farmer in making his will was asked by the lawyer the name of his wife, when he gravely replied: "Well, indeed, I really don't recollect what it is; we've been married for upward of forty years, and I've always called her my old woman." The lawyer left a blank, to be filled up when his old woman's name was ascertained.

The minister asked the Sunday school: "With what remarkable weapon did Sampson at one time slay a number of Philistines? For a while there was no answer, and the minister, to assist the children a little commenced tapping his jaw with the tip of his finger, at the same time saying, "What's this—what's this?" Quick as thought, a little fellow quite innocently replied, "The jaw-bone of an ass sir."

Three Things.

Three things to love: Courage, gentleness and affection.

Three things to admire: Intellect, dignity and gracefulness.

Three things to hate: Cruelty, arrogance and ingratitude.

Three things to delight in: Beauty, frankness and freedom.

Three things to like: Cordiality, good humor and cheerfulness.

Three things to avoid: Idleness, loquacity and flippant jesting.

Three things to contend for: Honor, country and friends.

Three things to govern: Temper, tongue and conduct.

Three things to think of: Life, death and eternity.

Delicacy of Mint Scales.

The fine gold weighing scales in the New Orleans mint are marvels of mechanic invention and accurate workmanship. The larger of the two has a capacity of 10,000 ounces troy, or about 686 pounds avoirdupois, and when loaded to its full weight will indicate a variation of one thousandth part of an ounce, or the millonth part of its weighing capacity. Another pair of scales is the one intended for weighing gold only. It has bearings composed of the finest agates, which have been ground with wonderful precision. So delicate is this machine that it will give the precise weight of a human hair, and is susceptible to the slightest atmospheric changes. Millions of dollars' worth of precious metals are weighed annually upon these scales.

Death to rats, mice, roaches and ants; Parsons' Exterminator. Barns, granaries and households cleared in a single night. No fear of bad smells. Best and cheapest vermin killer in the world. Sold everywhere.

It destroys half the pleasure of a summer resort to hear a man at the dinner table eat soup like the last few gallons of water being sucked out of the bath tub by the waste pipe.

A Mortgage.

In the whole range of sacred and profane literature, perhaps there is nothing recorded which has such staying properties as a good mortgage. A mortgage can be depended upon to stick closer than a brother. It has a mission to perform which never lets up. Day after day it is right there, nor does the slightest tendency to slumber impair its vigor in the night. Night and day, on the Sabbath, and at holiday times, without a moment's time for rest or recreation, this killing offspring of its existence—interest—goes on. The season may change, days run into weeks, weeks into months, to be swallowed up in the gray maw of advancing years, but the mortgage stands up in sleepless vigilance, with the interest a perennial stream, ceaselessly running on. Like a huge nightmare eating out the sleep of some restless slumberer, the unpaid mortgage rears up its gaunt front in perpetual torment of the miserable wight who is held within its pitiless clutch. It holds the poor victim in the relentless grasp of a giant; not one hour of recreation; not a moments, evasion of its hideous presence. A genial savage of mollifying aspect while the interest is paid; the very devil of hopeless destruction when the payments fail.

Hear! Hear!!

"Make home a home and make it one in every sense of the word. My husband is a great smoker; he loves to play cards, dominoes and chess; he is at perfect liberty to smoke in any room in the house, and I am always ready to join him in the different games. I endeavor in every way to be not only a helpmate, but a companion to him, and the result is that I have and enjoy his society. I cannot understand why women will run the risk of losing their husbands' society and love merely for the sake of satisfying an over-fastidious taste. If they do not like tobacco, did they object to his using it during their courtship? And if they objected then and failed, why did they marry? If men will not give up such habits at the solicitations of their sweethearts, it is not likely they will be persuaded out of them by their wives; therefore I think it unwise for a woman to risk her happiness by quarreling with her husband over a venal fault, the existence and extent of which she knew and perfectly understood before she took upon herself the duties of a wife."

Children's Laughter.

There are no sounds so sweet to a mother's ear, except, perhaps, the first lisping of an infant's prayer. Children's laughter! How dull is the home wherein its music once so joyously echoed, but is now heard no more. How still is the house where the little ones are all fast asleep, their pattering feet are silent. How easily the fun of a child bubbles forth. Take even those poor, prematurely aged little ones bred in the gutter, cramped in unearthly homes, and ill used, it may be, by drunken parents, and you will find that the child nature is not entirely crushed out of them. They are children still, albeit they look so haggard and wan. Try to excite their mirthfulness, and ere long a laugh rings out as wild and free as if there was no such thing as sorrow in the world. Let the little ones laugh then; too soon, alas! they will find cause enough to weep. Do not try to silence them, but let their gleefulness ring out in gladsome peal, and reminding us of the days when we, too, could laugh without a sigh.

The worst stutterer in this country was at a picnic near Des Moines on the Fourth. Just as they were camped around a table cloth, preparing to lunch, he started at some object, pointed his finger "There's a s-n-n-" and two women climbed into the excursion car in two seconds and one lap. "A s-n-n" continued the stutterer, and three white skirts fluttered from the lowermost branches of a neighboring tree. "A s-n-n" he continued, while the heels of two pairs of No. 3 gaiters were seen vanishing over an eight rail fence with a confederate rider. The stammerer grew red in the face and great beads of perspiration stood on his brow as he struggled on, and the male members of the party hunted for clubs and stepped as high as a prancing Arabian courser. "A sn-sni-snide egg in this custard pie," he finally managed to stutter. Then two women came down from that excursion car, and three women slid down out of a neighboring tree, and the owners of two pairs of No. 3 gaiters, gathered around that festive board and fell upon the enemy and smote him hip and thigh.

Wooden Swearing.

A Sabbath school lesson was about swearing, and when the children had repeated their verses, the minister rose to talk to them.

"I hope, dear children," he said, "that you will never let your lips speak profane words. But now I want to tell you about a kind of swearing which I heard a good woman speak about not long ago.

She called it wooden swearing. It's a kind of swearing that many people beside children are given to, when they are angry. Instead of giving vent to their feelings in oaths, they slam the doors, kick the chairs, stamp on the floor, throw the furniture about, and make all the noise they possibly can. 'Isn't this just the same as swearing?' said she. Its just the same kind of feeling exactly, only they do not like to say those awful words; but they force the furniture to make the noise, and so I call it 'wooden swearing'. I hope, dear children, that you will not do any of this kind of swearing either." It is better to let alone wooden and all other kinds of swearing.

Beauty Regained.

The beauty and color of the hair may be safely regained by using Parker's Hair Balsam, which is much admired for its perfume, cleanliness and dandruff eradicating properties.

It is said that bichromate of potasse has the property of rendering glue and gelatin insoluble in water. Thus paper and stuffs of cotton, linen, or silk, if coated with this insoluable glue, become perfectly impervious. To render glue insoluble, it is sufficient to add to the water in which it is dissolved, 1 part of bichromate to 50 parts of gelatin. The addition is only made at the moment when the liquid is to be used. The process is conducted in full daylight. The Japanese make their umbrellas with paper prepared in this way.

Schoolboy Blunders.

The Lyon County (Nev.) Times, writing of the ludicrous mistakes at a recent school examination there, says: Although the replies indicated a reasonably high degree of proficiency among the scholars, some ludicrous mistakes were made:

A boy was told to correct the following sentence: "Milo began to lift the ox when he was a calf." The reply was: "Milo, when he was an ox, began to lift the calf."

A little boy was asked: "What are the principal minerals in Nevada?" He replied, without the least hesitation: "Gold, silver and trout."

To the question, "How would you go from New York to San Francisco by water?" a boy in the same department replied promptly, and, with the utmost assurance: "By boat!"

Another scholar in the same class being asked, "Why do you celebrate the Fourth of July?" answered unhesitatingly: "Because three Presidents died on that day."

A boy in the high school, having been required to give the plural of two, answered "Three!" and resumed his seat with a self-satisfied air.

What a Plant Did.

A little plant was given to a sick girl. In trying to take care of it, the family made changes in their way of living. First, they cleaned the window, that more light might come to its leaves; then, when not too cold, they would open the window, that fresh air might help the plant to grow. Next, the clean window made the rest of the room look so untidy that they used to wash the floor and walls, and arrange the furniture more neatly. This led the father of the family to mend a broken chair or two, which kept him at home several evenings. After the work was done he stayed at home instead of spending his leisure time at the tavern; and the money thus saved went to buy comforts for them all. And then as the home grew attractive, the whole family loved it better than ever before, and grew healthier and happier with their flowers. Thus the little plant brought a real as well as a physical blessing.

The Habit of Fainting.

There is not so much fainting in public as there was thirty years ago. Sound health, which necessarily secures the firm nerves and muscles, is the surest preventative of faintness. An exchange remarks that the majority of vigorous men go through all kinds of severe and painful experiences without fainting, while delicate men and many women swoon at trifles. American women, who used to faint continually—in crowds, at bad news, at scenes of distress—now faint comparatively seldom; and the fact is ascribed to their relinquishment, for the most part, of the habit of lacing, to their increased exercise in the open air, and their better physical conditions. Not one American woman faints to-day where, thirty years ago, twenty-five women fainted, and the diminution of the disorder, always the result of direct causes, is an unmistakable evidence, which other things corroborate, of the marked amelioration of the health of the highly organized, extremely sensitive, but flexible and enduring women of our complex race.

"Rough on Rats."

The thing desired found at last.—Ask Druggists for "Rough on Rats." It clears out rats, mice, roaches, flies, bed-bugs. 15c. boxes.

Early Sleep.

Sleep obtained two hours before midnight, when the negative forces are in operation, is the rest which most recuperates the system, giving brightness to the eyes and a glow to the cheek. The difference in the appearance of a person who habitually retires at ten o'clock, and that of one who sits up till twelve, is quite remarkable. The tone of the system, so evident in the complexion, the clearness and sparkle of the eyes, and the softness of the lines of the features, is, in a person of health kept at "concert pitch," by taking regular rest two hours before twelve o'clock, and then obtaining the "beauty sleep" of night. There is a heaviness of the eyes a sallowness of the skin, and an absence of that glow in the face which renders it fresh in expression and round in appearance, which readily distinguish the person who keeps late hours.

Skinny Men

Wells' Health Renewer. Absolute cure for nervous debility and weakness of the generative functions. $1, at druggists. Mich. Depot, J. E. Davies & Co., Detroit, Mich.

A correspondent of the Methodist, advises the use of water instead of wine at communion, and says "The emphasis of the command which institutes the Lord's supper is not on the pronoun 'this,' indicating the substance used, but on the verbs 'eat' and 'drink,' and on the spiritual purpose designated by the phrase 'in remembrance of me.' The symbolic character of the Sacrament no more requires a particular kind of bread. The bread used in our time is not usually, at least, perhaps never, the same kind as that used by our Saviour. He instituted the supper with the common drink of the country and time; whether it was a fermented wine does not concern our argument. Our common drink is water and not wine; and it is practically difficult for most churches to procure wine that is not adulterated. We should use water at the Lord's supper with a good conscience."

God will not force the truth into the soul. He puts the Tree of Life before us, and the beautiful fruit hangs all golden, but we can take it or let it alone.

PILES! PILES!! PILES!!!

by Dr. Williams (an Indian remedy), called Dr. Williams' Indian Ointment. A single box has cured the worst chronic cases of 25 and 30 years standing. No one need suffer five minutes after applying this wonderful soothing medicine. Lotions, Instruments, and Electuaries do more harm than good. Williams' Ointment absorbs the tumors, allays the intense itching (particularly at night after getting warm in bed), acts as a poultice, gives instant and painless relief, and is prepared only for Piles, itching of the private parts, and nothing else.

Read what the Hon. J. M. Coffinberry, of Cleveland, says about Dr. Williams' Indian Pile Ointment: "I have used scores of pile cures, but it affords me pleasure to say that I have never found anything which gave such immediate and permanent relief as Dr. Williams' Indian Ointment."

ARTHURS' HOME MAGAZINE.

A NEW YEAR —WITH— New and Increased Attractions!

The Home Magazine occupies, and has always occupied a field especially its own. While gathering for its pages from the whole range of general literature, the editor and his efficient co-laborers exercise the most careful discrimination in regard to quality and influence. Nothing is admitted which, in their view, can give false ideas of life, or weaken the bonds of virtue. No matter what may be the reputation, nor how brilliant the talents of the writer, if his moral teachings are at all questionable, they can not find a place in our magazine.—And beyond this, its publishers claim that in its peculiar character and varied departments it is more thoroughly identified with the people in their every-day life and home and social interests than any other first-class periodical.

The Home Magazine for 1882 will be the most interesting and attractive that has yet appeared.

WHAT OUR SUBSCRIBERS SAY.

"The day on which the Home Magazine comes is hailed every month with joy, not only by myself, but the whole family. It is like the face of an old friend."

"I cannot send off this letter without saying how pleased we are with the Home Magazine. We find it next to impossible to do without it."

TECUMSEH, MICH., MAR. 9, 1882.

A special examination of teachers will be held at the central school building in this village next Saturday, March 11.

MAT BLOSSER, of the Enterprise and Fred Field, of the News, with a delegation of their Manchester and Clinton friends took the HERALD office by storm Tuesday afternoon.—They came down to see Hazel Kirke, and as a proper preparation to enjoying the show they made us a call.

The flood in the lower Mississippi valley continues. The water at Greenville, Miss., is one foot higher than ever before known. This district, which is known as the Yazoo Delta, is the most productive cotton section in the South. Bolivar county is almost wholly under water, and the loss of stock is total.

THE Hudson Post speaks right out in meeting thusly:

Referring to the Navin rascalities the Lansing Republican says "There stood only two things in the way of the complete success of the scheme, one was the enterprise of the veteran journalist, T. S. Applegate of the Adrian Times."

Good gracious. "Ish dot so." We didn't know it was the cackling of that goose that saved Adrian. Supposed Willard Stearns was the only rooster that could crow about that.

SOUTH Main street, the new location for the postoffice at Adrian, is thus described by the Press: "The street is narrow; carcasses of beef, veal and pork swing out from two meat markets; troughs of fish from two stalls add to the variety; from three saloons are pouring forth a crowd of frequenters, with the language and boisterousness that come from such inspiration; tomato plants, cabbages and berry stands line the sidewalks in front of groceries; barrels of kerosene oil proclaim the location of the oil stores, and the streets are eternally crowded with wood and produce." A more inconvenient location for the postoffice could not have well been found upon the entire paved district.

THE Adrian Record contains a special report from Mayor Navin in which appears this bit of interesting news for us:

Fitzy, the old boy, has become quite familiar with me, but as yet he only knows me as "Jerome McAtee, from Australia." It was a queer story that Fitzy related to me, of the events that led him to seek a better air than that of Tecumseh. He told me that himself and a number of other army officers were induced to invest a big wad in a salted mine, which never panned out a nickle. The company lost about $——, of which Fitzy's share was some $——, if I recollect right. He then went south in the interest of General Grant, to retrieve his fortunes, as a civil engineer, leaving the bank in the charge of Dutton, hoping to strengthen the concern before its weakness should be discovered, and this he expects to do. He don't know the bank has gone to the deuce, and of course I don't dare to let him know that I know anything about it.

THE WHITE MOUNTAINS EXCURSION.

In the Detroit Evening News of March 3d, an advance announcement is made of the sixth season of excursions "From Detroit to the Sea." They will be three in number and will leave Detroit on the mornings of July 5th, 20th, and 27th, and tickets will be good to return any time before Sept. 4th. The route is to be via. the Grand Trunk railroad and St. Lawrence river steamers, through the Thousand islands and famous rapids to Montreal, thence to the White Mountains and sea shore at Portland, Maine, (near Boston.) On the return trip, Quebec, Niagara Falls and Buffalo, are to be included, making altogether a trip of over 2000 miles for $20. Each of the excursions will be conducted by W. H. Bearley, who has taken seven parties over the same route in former years and who last year successfully managed three excursions. The trains are "special" trains of Pullman palace cars, and upon the St. Lawrence river a special steamer will be used. A handsome guide book giving full descriptions and illustrations of this route, may be obtained for 30 cents by writing to Mr. Bearley, office Detroit Evening News. Over 40 maps have been engraved for this edition and the title page is an exact copy, in colors, of an oil painting of Glen Ellis Fall, near the Glen house, in the White mountains.

FROM THE OLD WORLD.

"Have you torn that spread, Charles Jenkins?"

And he answers something which [illegible]

I am now about as far away from you as possible to get on this little ball of earth and water, but my thoughts can fly to you just as quickly from here as from Detroit, and that they do both by night and day. It has become a habit lately whenever I think of you by day involuntarily to look down, as if peering through the earth at you all asleep, and when, in the watches of the night my thoughts visit you I look up and seem to see you all busied with the cares of life and its pleasures too.

"Passing away" is a motto constantly before us. We on our pleasure Yacht have had a sad experience. A young lady, the only child of her widowed father, was stricken down with fever brought on by over doing in sight seeing, as we all think, and in fact know. Her father, a strong, burly Englishman, and a cousin traveling with them, quite as delicate looking as the daughter, but much stronger constitution, led on, desirous of seeing everything possible of being visited, regardless of expense and fatigue, till the poor child gave out, though not till she had done too much after she was ill enough to be in bed, which was the case during the five days she was away from the ship at Cairo, between Alexandria and Suez. On her return to the ship she took her bed and never left it. The sleep at the turn of the fever was her last, and in just one week from Suez she was buried in the "deep, deep sea." It was a sad and solemn experience to us all. The burial particularly so.—The coffin sewed up in canvass and covered with a flag, was placed on the deck, and all our shiphold stood around it while the burial service was read and prayers offered, then the sailors lifted the coffin to an opening in the bulwarks and it was quietly dropped into the sea on the 28th of December, 1881. I was told that there were some 400 lbs. weight placed in the coffin and it sank out of sight at once. I did not see it nor hear any splash. It took some time to wear off the sadness of the event, and I was glad we were having a long sea voyage at the time. We were 14 days from Suez to Bombay, 5 days and nights on the Red Sea, most of the time with the eastern shore in sight, but not very distinct.—Saw Mocha, nestled in its green surroundings, which of course we supposed to be coffee plantations; they might as well be cocoanut trees. Did not call at Aden on account of cholera reports. It would have subjected us to quarantine at Bombay, where we arrived on the 5th inst.

A beautiful place is Bombay. I went on shore and stayed at hotel, enjoying the change. We had from 5th day morning till 7th day evening—quite an outing. The drives about Bombay are charming, and such a variety of people; such variety of costumes, and no costumes at all. I was on new ground and new scenes at last; among Hindoos, Malays, Parsees, Mahomedans and English. What wonders the English have done toward civilizing if not christianizing the natives of this country. Christianity progresses too, though slowly. The Parsees are the most wealthy and intelligent of the natives; fine looking, drive about and live in style. They are fire worshippers, or rather, they worship all the elements. Fire is too sacred to burn their dead; the earth must not be polluted with them, neither the sea, so they build towers called "Towers of Silence," on the top of which they deposit their dead and let the vultures, of which there are a plenty, pick the flesh from the bones, which we are told would be done in an hour's time; then the bones bleach in the sun and when perfectly dried are swept into a deep well in the centre of the tower. They do not object to dust returning to dust when clean like this bone dust. We visited one of these "Towers of Silence," a beautiful spot on a high hill, with plenty of vultures and crows sitting on the walls. Near the "Tower of Silence," is another smaller one, a high circular wall, into which the clothes of the dead are thrown after being taken from the body before it is deposited on the "Tower of Silence."

We also saw the Hindoos burning their dead. They have regular burning grounds, and fires are kept going all the time. There are four iron post set up say two feet apart at the ends and five feet lengthwise. Between these posts the body is placed and the wood piled around them, and over inside of these posts; the wood hard and dry, making a terribly hot fire, and when they think the body is about consumed the old demons poke into the coals with long sticks to discover if any portion remains, poking out the black mass, then picking it up and putting it carefully back in the hottest place, till all is consumed. I saw all this done while I was hanging on a wall by my fingers and toes, quite near one of these hot fires, mercury at 96° and glaring sun, but I was under a tree. They do not allow us to go on their grounds so we steal a look over a wall. Five fires burning at once.

MRS. LYMAN'S RECIPES.

We print herewith a number of the recipes given by Mrs. Lyman, on her recent visit here, to the ladies who attended her lectures.

PUFF PASTE.

One pound of superfine flour, one pound of butter; sift the flour, heap it up, make a hole in the center, squeeze in the juice of half a lemon, add the yolk of one egg, then stir with one hand and drop in with the other ice water till you have a paste just as hard as your butter; roll the paste out in a smooth square an inch thick; smooth the sides with a rolling pin; spread over one-half of the paste your butter; lay the other half of the paste over like an old fashioned turnover; leave it for fifteen minutes in a cold place, then roll out in a long strip, keeping the edges smooth, then double it in three parts in this wise: lay over one-third, roll it down, then lap over the other third, then roll out in a long strip and repeat the following process: let it lie for fifteen minutes; repeat this six times, allowing fifteen minutes between each rolling. The paste is now ready for use. This is the finest paste known to the cuisine art.

BREAD SPONGE.

Four good sized potatoes, boiled and mashed while hot, two tablespoonfuls of white sugar, two of butter, one quart of tepid water. Stir in this three cups of flour, beat to a smooth batter, then add six tablespoonfuls of the yeast. Set over night. In the morning knead in sufficient flour to make a stiff, spongy dough; knead vigorously for fifteen minutes. Set away to rise, and when light knead for ten minutes. Mold out into moderately sized loaves. Let rise until the loaves are delicate like light sponge cake.

POTATO YEAST.

Four good sized potatoes, boiled and mashed, one tablespoonful of ginger, one teaspoonful of salt, half cup of sugar, two cups of flour. Pour over this a pint of boiling water, and beat till all the lumps disappear. After it has cooled add to it one cup of baker's yeast and set it away to rise. After it is done rising put it into a glass jar and close, and set away in a cool place. Add six tablepoonsful of this yeast to your sponge.

POTATO SOUPLEE—VERY DELICATE.

Four good-sized mealy potatoes boiled; pass through a sieve; one-half teacup of milk; one tablespoonful of good butter; let the butter and milk come to a scald in a clean saucepan; add the potatoe, a little salt and pepper, and beat to a cream; add, one at a time the yolks of four eggs, beating thoroughly; drop a small pinch of salt into the whites, and beat them to a stiff froth; add them to the mixture, beating as little as possible; have ready a well buttered baking dish, large enough to admit of the souplee's rising and not running over; bake twenty minutes in a brisk oven; serve at once, and in the same dish in which it was baked; to be eaten with meats that have gravies.

FRENCH WAFFLES.

Beat up three eggs well, add a pint of sweet milk, and a pinch of salt; cut slices an inch thick from a loaf of baker's bread; cut off the crust and dip the slices into the eggs and milk, and fry in very hot lard or drippings till a delicate brown. Butter and sprinkle with powdered sugar and serve hot. Most delicious.

LEG OF MUTTON A LA VENISON.

Remove all the rough fat from a leg of mutton; lay it in a deep earthen dish; rub into the meat very thoroughly the following mixture: one tablespoonful of salt, one tablespoonful of celery salt, one tablespoonful of brown sugar, one teaspoonful of black pepper, one of made mustard, one of allspice, one tablespoonful of sweet herbs mixed and powdered. After these have been rubbed into all parts of the meat, pour over it slowly a teacupful of good vinegar; cover tightly and set in a cool place for four or five days, turning the ham and basting it with the liquid three or four times a day. To cook this, have in a clean kettle one quart of boiling water; have in the kettle an inverted tin pan or a rack made for the purpose; lay your ham on it just as you take it out of the pickle; cover the kettle tightly and stew for four hours. Do not allow the water to touch the meat. Add a teacupful of hot water to the pickle and baste the ham very often with it. When ready to serve thicken the liquid in the kettle with flour, strain through a fine strainer and serve with the meat.

GREEN CORN SOUP.

One large fowl, or four pounds of veal—the knuckle and neck will do as well; put over in one gallon of cold water without salt; cover tightly and simmer slowly till the meat slips from the bone; do not let it boil to rags, as it will make a nice dish for breakfast or lunch, or in fact, for the dinner. Set aside with the meat a cupful of the liquor. Strain the soup to remove all bones and rags of the meat; grate one dozen ears of green corn, scrape the cob to remove the heart of the kernel; add the corn to the soup, with salt, pepper, and a little parsley; simmer slowly a half hour; just before serving add a tablespoonful of flour beaten very thoroughly with a tablespoonful of butter. Serve hot. To serve the chicken or veal, put the cup of broth in a clean saucepan; beat one egg, a tablespoonful of butter, and a teaspoonful of flour all together very thoroughly, and add to the broth with salt, pepper and chopped parsley; boil all together for a minute; arrange the meat on a dish, pour over the dressing while boiling hot, serve at once.

SALAD DRESSING.

The yolks of two eggs, beaten thoroughly, one teaspoonful of salt, one of pepper, two of white sugar, two of made mustard, one tablespoonful of butter; stir in the mixture four tablespoonsful of best vinegar, put the dressing into a bowl, then set it in a kettle of hot water, and stir constantly till it thickens; set it away, and when cool it is ready for use. Add a cup full of sweet cream. This is superior to the dressing made of olive oil.

$500 Cash in Prizes.

It is only a few years since Messrs Hiram Sibley & Co., were known at all in the seed business, but in those few years they have advanced with such wonderful rapidity that they are now universally recognized as leading seedsmen. Their warehouse at Rochester is a mammoth building nine stories high, while in Chicago they occupy a five story building and have no room to spare. Mr. Sibley is widely known as proprietor of the 8,000 acre Sullivant Farm in Illinois, the largest cultivated farm in the world. Here over 3,000 acres were last year devoted to seed raising.

Just now the firm are especially desirous of obtaining all information calculated to fit them for the most intelligent service of their many customers in the South. To this end they are offering $500 cash in prizes for the best essays on gardening in the Southern states. These essays must come from those practically acquainted with all the conditions affecting the subject; and the decisions regarding their respective merits will be made by well-known and admitted competent judges. Full particulars can be obtained by addressing Hiram Sibley & Co., Seedsmen, at either Rochester, N. Y., or Chicago, Ill.

THE WALTER A. WOOD HARVESTING MACHINES

Take the Lead.

In 1853, 500 Machines were sold.
In 1881, 40,413 were sold, and
47,000 have been ordered for 1882.

But the NE PLUS ULTRA of Harvesting Machinery is the Wood Twine Binder. This machine was first put upon the market in 1880, and 4,184 machines were sold that year. In 1881, the sales swelled to 10,034, and orders for over 12,000 have already been received for 1882.

THE WOOD TWINE BINDER!

Possesses these special points of excellence:

1—It is the most perfect automatic self binder ever made.
2—It effects a positive separation of the bound from the unbound grain.
3—The sheaf is formed and compressed without any strain on the twine until the knot is tied.
4—The grain is straightened by the action of the packer as it enters the binder.
5—The automatic uniform sizing of the bundle, thus relieving the driver of the care of stopping and starting the binder.

Last year's machines proved such a perfect success that they will be built substantially the same for 1882, with such improvements in minor details as may be found necessary.

Every farmer desiring to buy a self binder should examine the Wood Twine Binder before purchasing.

THE concert given by the Hyers sisters last Saturday evening was greeted with a good audience and fully met the public expectation. The soprano singer cannot well be surpassed; while there are three or four superior vocalists in the troupe. Their programs are arranged in good taste and are finely executed.

WOULD it not be a good plan to vote a special highway tax this spring to gravel Chicago turnpike through the town of Tecumseh from the Ridgeway to the Franklin town lines? If Tecumseh would take the initiative in this matter, it is quite likely that Ridgeway and Franklin would extend the work in those towns to Ridgeway village and Franklin Center. Such an enterprise would be a great benefit to the residents of all three towns. We should be pleased to hear from some of our farmer friends on this subject.

It is easily proven that malarial fevers, constipation, torpidity of the liver and kidneys, general debility, nervousness, and neuralgic ailments yield readily to this great disease conqueror, Hop Bitters. It repairs the ravages of disease by converting the the food into rich blood, and it gives new life and vigor to the aged and infirm always.

C. M. Fellows, of Manchester, has just returned from Vermont with his sixth load of registered sheep. He has a fine lot of young ewes bred to choice rams, which he offers at less rates than such sheep are usually sold at. It will pay any lover of good sheep to look his flock over whether they want to buy or not. It is a good time to purchase just before the shearing and lambing season. He warrants his sheep to be what he represents.

WE invite attention to the prospectus in another column of the Sanitary Engineer. This periodical was established as a monthly about four years ago, and soon won a place as an authority in matters of ventilation, drainage and measures for preserving the public health. It is not only a useful publication to plumbers and engineers, but also for physicians, village and city officials, and in fact any one who takes an interest in health matters. Send for a sample copy.

His local difficulties have all been relieved and his entire system toned up and strengthened. I thank you for your promptness in writing, and we shall ever remember you with gratitude." So writes a lady of Warwick, Orange county, N. Y., to Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y.—Write to Dr. Kennedy, stating your case. "Favorite Remedy" for sale everywhere.

The price of the volume is 50 cents, and it is for sale at all news stands and bookstores.

THE Hazel Kirke entertainment last Tuesday evening was pronounced by all who witnessed it to be one of the best plays ever given in the Opera House. The play itself is a fine dramatic composition, the parts were well carried, and the scenery and costumes were elegant. Tom Adamson and W. H. Sluk, under whose auspices the troupe came here, are entitled to credit for their enterprise.

THE Scientific American has the following information for those who desire to get rid of stumps: "In the autumn bore a hole one or two inches in diameter, according to the girth of the latter, and about eighteen inches deep. Put into it two or three ounces of saltpeter, fill the hole with water and plug it up close. In the ensuing spring take out the plug and pour in about a half gill of kerosene oil and ignite it. The stump will smoulder away without blazing, to the very extremity of the roots, leaving nothing but the ashes.

A Safe Cracked Open.

Wm. Hayden received a telegram last Sunday that the safe in Whitmarsh's grocery store at Milan, where his funds for buying stave bolts was deposited, had been broken open by burglars. He took the train Monday morning for Milan, and upon arriving there soon learned the particulars of the affair. Three men, as is supposed, broke into the store on Saturday night through a rear door. A hole was drilled through the safe door in front of the lock, a small probe inserted and the lock hammered off. Both doors were forced in this way. The cash in the safe was abstracted, there being about $400 belonging to Mr. Hayden and $160 belonging to Mr. Whitmarsh. The burglars then took a box of cigars went to the railroad, appropriated a hand car, and left town by a private train. The tools had been picked up at three or four places around town, which indicates that some resident must have had a hand in the business. The missing hand car had not been found at last accounts, nor the thieves.

A Woman's Life Work.

Aunt Laura Haviland, of Raisin, has just published her book entitled a "Woman's Life Work." It is a book of nineteen chapters and over five hundred pages, and is thrillingly interesting from the first to the last page. The titles of the chapters, which indicate the character of the contents, are these: Early Life, Bereavements, Anti-Slavery Experiences, An Ohio School Teacher, The Underground Railway, Fugitive Slaves Assisted, Christian and Educational Work, Fugitives in Canada, Rescue of Slaves, Hospital Work, Sanitary Work, Missionary Work in New Orleans, Freedman's Aid Commission, Home Mission Work, Experiences Among Freedmen, State Public School, Christian Labor and Results, Present Condition of the Freedmen, Prospect of the Freedmen. The author has a direct and yet very pleasing style of composition, and her personal experiences demonstrate the truth of the old saying that fact is sometimes stranger than fiction. The book deserves and will undoubtedly have a large sale.—A. Camburn, of Adrian, is general agent for southern Michigan and northern Ohio. Miss Hattie Stevens is agent for Tecumseh and vicinity.

Baptist Missionary Conference.

EDITOR HERALD:—Will you permit me to announce through your columns a notable meeting to be held at the Baptist church on the 13th and 14th insts. The meeting will be a Missionary Conference. On Monday evening a sermon will be preached by Rev. S. M. Stinson, D. D., District Secretary of the American Baptist Missionary Union. Tuesday will be devoted to short addresses from ministerial brethren from abroad. Fifteen names in all appear on the program.

An Adrian lady said last spring to a minister, when invited by him to attend a meeting somewhat similar to this: "No, I think I'll not come; I don't like to attend meetings of ministers, for they always talk about churches, Sunday schools, and missions and so on; they never talk about anything interesting."

Now the burden of this meeting will be missions and churches and Sunday schools; if that Adrian lady lives in Tecumseh now, she would not be interested. But all genuine Tecumsehites, of course are interested in these things. Hence we extend the invitation to all members of all Tecumseh churches to attend the meetings of this conference. Respectfully,

C. E. CONLEY,
Pastor Baptist Church.

THE VILLAGE ELECTION.

The corporation election took place last Monday. The regular caucus was held last Saturday evening and was the most numerously attended of any village caucus that has been held in many years. The ticket placed in nomination there, which was called the "corporation ticket," contained the following names:

For President—Adelbert W. Mills.
For Recorder—Frederick B. Wood.
For Treasurer—David McNair.
For Trustees for two years—Henry Smith, Charles Burridge, Benjamin F. Steinhoff.
For Assessors—David Jones, Alfred James.

On Monday morning two other tickets were placed in the field: The "Peoples," which had Peter S. McKinnon for Recorder and Benj. F. Reynolds for Trustee in place of Charles Burridge; the "Independent," which had Wm. Hayden for President and Horatio Keyser for Assessor in place of David Jones. The contest seemed to be on President, Recorder and one trustee. David Jones declined the honor of assessor, and advised his friends to vote for Keyser, and hence Mr. Keyser was easily elected. Mr. Hayden was out of town and it is doubtful whether he would have allowed his name to run had he been at home. A telegram was received from him at three o'clock in the afternoon positively declining, but it was then too late to influence the result. There was no political issue whatever involved. If there was any issue involved at all it was the purchase of a corporation team and the appointment of a marshall. As regards the team issue, Mr. Hayden and Mr. Mills occupied the same position. Mr. Mills was on the committee of the last council which had charge of buying a team. He incidentally conferred with Mr. Hayden on the subject, who strongly favored the project and actually advised the purchase of the team we have at the price paid. Below we give a copy of the tally sheet with the number of votes cast for each person.

For President,
Adelbert W. Mills	168
Wm. Hayden	142
For Recorder,

March 4.—The jury in the case of Letcher vs. Fornsdorf was sent out at 10 A. M. yesterday, and were out until 11 o'clock, last night, when failing to agree they were discharged. It is understood that the failure to agree arose from a difference of opinion as to whether the damages for plaintiff should be nominal or more than nominal.

In the case of Col. S. Vredenburg vs. Charles Shaler suit was dismissed on account of failure of plaintiff to file security for costs as ordered by the court.

The case of Mrs. Knight against Harry Whitney, civil suit for assault and battery, was decided in favor of the plaintiff; $1500 damages. Westerman, Westerman, & C. R. Miller for plaintiff, Millard & Bean for defense.

HORTICULTURE.

The state Horticultural Institute opened in Fowle's opera house on Tuesday of last week.

Prayer opened the meeting and Dr. Smart delivered the welcome address. President Lyons, of South Haven, presided. Chas. W. Garfield, of Grand Rapids was at the desk. We shall not attempt to give the minutes of the whole proceedings but present each topic discussed in its proper order.

BUILDINGS.

S. W. Door of Manchester had erected on his fruit farm near that place a large building for preserving fruit. It was on the cool air system, requiring no ice or artificial heat. He said apples could be kept in such a room until June or July of the next season with little trouble and no expense whatever. A good many apples which are allowed to waste in flush seasons could be kept over till the market was such as to warrant a sale.

FRUIT PACKAGES.

A. D. Healy, of South Haven, an extensive dealer in fruit was satisfied that more money was made by putting fruit up in an honest manner than any one would reasonably suppose. He claimed pomologists of western Michigan to be the greatest cheats in the fruit business he ever knew. Good packages, well capped and honestly packed would soon gain for the raiser a reputation that would create a demand for his fruit at any price.

IMPLEMENTS.

S. B. Mann, of Adrian, and E. M. Potter, of Kalamazoo spoke of implements as the only real money saving friends the farmers have. Both could see no reason for farmers allowing the rain or hot sun to cause rust and decay, when a few boards properly nailed together would save lots of money and trouble.

SEEDS

were fully explained by Prof. W. W. Tracy, of Detroit. His illustrations were a novel feature in this convention.

MICHIGAN NURSERY STOCK.

To say that only a few years ago fruit raising was almost an unknown art in Michigan, is but to repeat what has often been said, but to tell a Michigan farmer that he can purchase as good trees of home nurseries as he can from abroad will somewhat startle him. Nevertheless Michigan can and does furnish as good trees as can be found in the U. S. In many localities none but the trees raised in that vicinity will do well. Mr. E. D. Pierson, of Hudson had raised to maturity 2000 trees from home nurseries. He dug his holes from 16 inches to 2 feet in depth 6 feet in diameter, filled around the roots rich soil, and had excellent success. The roots of trees should never be exposed when transplanting. Sec'y Garfield urged that trees be purchased at home even if a little higher price was paid. In answer to inquiries parties were told that peach trees free from yellow could be obtained near Adrian and Monroe.

THE GARDEN.

Prof. Beal told an amusing but true story about some little girls who engaged in horticulture to the extent of making a garden a few feet square. They sold their products and reaped a little profit, both financially, mentally and physically. He wanted to see children educated in this direction. C. B. Stowell, of Hudson, was a gardener and knew of what benefit a good, well tilled and well cared for garden was to a farm. The wife and children can and will take care of one if the space be granted them. Such healthful fruits as strawberries, grapes, peaches, pears, &c., were invaluable as food for both young and old.

MAKE THE FARM HOME PLEASANT.

Mary J. Allen, of Rollin had several girls. To give them some responsibility, she planted large quantities of fruit trees. Now besides the household duties they have something to give them the out door exercise necessary. Hon. Thos. Moore, of Madison, wanted home made pleasant for the children. When the boys and girls arrive at a certain age they need something to keep their minds constantly occupied. Beautify your lawns and houses, fill your libraries and you will have no trouble to keep them on the farm.

THE COUNTRY SCHOOL HOUSE.

Prof. Beal, of the agricultural college, spoke several times of the very poor condition of the school houses in Michigan, especially the country school house. The president wanted to see a reform in this direction. The young hands should be taught to care for the flowers and vegetables in connection with drilling the mind with mathematics. Sec'y Garfield had had some experience in this direction. He said an effort to beautify the school grounds was made last year with grand success. Many speeches were then made upon this topic and all seemed to want to give the children a chance. The following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That it is the opinion of the members of the State Horticultural society that every country school house shall have at least one acre of ground in connection.

HORTICULTURAL EDUCATION.

R. T. McNaughton, of Jackson, thought, as it is becoming the custom for many schools to have the young attending apply their knowedge either in the shop or on the farm in connection it would be just to have horticulture represented at all schools. Dr. Owen, of Adrian advocated the holding of farmers' institutes as often as possible. They are great educators. Prof. Tracy, of Detroit was of the opinion that the great advancement made by pomologists was largely due to their institutes. Mr. Stowell, of Hudson had been favorably impressed with the meetings and would do all in his power to have the work go on.

The exercises throughout were interpersed with music of a vocal and instrumental nature.

The display of fruit was good considering the dry and hot weather of 1881.

The state society tendered a vote of thanks to Hudson citizens for hospitality and aid.

Treatment for Super-Sensitive People.

The most difficult people to get along comfortably with are the super-sensitive people. We all have them among our friends. They are perpetually on the lookout for slights, and ready to feel injured on the slightest provocation—often no provocation at all. One has to be as careful of his treatment of them as if he were walking on rotten eggs. Every word must be watched, every tone guarded, and no attention that could possibly be expected must be omitted. In short, intercourse with these people is so often intolerable that we instinctively avoid them as far as we can. Were all men of this stamp, life would soon be a burden too grievous to be borne.

We never waste any pity on these over-sensitive people. With all their complaints they enjoy being slighted, or imagining they are slighted. It feeds their vanity, and magnifies their sense of importance, to have their friends constantly making explanations and apologies, protesting that they didn't mean this and didn't intend to do that. They really take a certain sort of comfort in cherishing the conviction that they are badly treated by all the world. Let them enjoy their luxury; it would be cruel to take it from them.

This sort of grown up children are not uncommon in our churches. They are at the bottom of more than half the bickerings and petty feuds that mar the harmony of church life and destroy the unity of church efforts. Like a spoiled child they must have their own way in everything or cry. They are in the church to be petted and pampered and coaxed and fussed over. If they have a headache, or a cold that keeps them from church on Sunday, and the pastor, the deacons and half the church do not call on Monday to see what is the matter and condole with them, they consider it an unpardonable neglect of duty. Such a thing as their calling on any one else who is ill or in trouble never enters their head. If a fellow-member preoccupied by some business, chances to pass them on the street without recognition, they take a mortal affront. Does the church contemplate any new enterprises? They must be consulted first, and their whims deferred to, or there is no end to their complaints.

The best treatment for spoiled children is judicious firmness, suplemented when necessary by liberal doses of oil of birch. These spoiled grown-up children need a similar course of treatment. A little judicious severity, a thorough shaking up of their moral faculties; a good stinging rebuke now and then will work wonders. If they have the right stuff in them, this will act as a tonic, and they will develop rapidly into sound, active, healthy, sensible Christians. If they have not the root of the matter in them, the fact will soon be made known, and the churches will be rid of those who only trouble them. A child that can be saved at all can be saved by management that is at once firm and kindly; a church member that is worthy can be held by the same means.

"Send for Mother."

"Dear me! It wasn't enough for me to nurse and raise a family of my own, but now, when I am old and expect to take a little comfort here, it is all the time 'send for mother.'" And the dear old soul growls and grumbles, but dresses herself as fast as she can notwithstanding. After you have trotted her off, and got her safely in your home, and she flies around administering her remedies and rebukes by turns, you feel easier. It is right now, or soon will be—mother's come!

In sickness, no matter who is there or how many doctors quarrel over your case, every thing goes wrong, somehow, till you send for mother.

In trouble, the first thing you think of is send for mother.

But this has its ludicrous as well as its touching aspect. The verdant young couple, to whom baby's extraordinary grimaces and alarming yawns, which threaten the dislocation of its chin; its wonderful sleeps, which it accomplishes with its eyes half open, and no perceptible flutter of breath on its lips, causing the young mother to imagine its dead this time, and to shriek out, "send for mother!" in tones of anguish—this young couple, in the light of the experience which three or four babies bring, find they have been ridiculous, and given mother a good many trots for nothing.

Did any one ever send for mother and she fail to come? Never,—unless sickness or the infirmities of age prevented her. As when, in your childhood, those willing feet responded to your call, so they still do, and will continue to do as long as they are able. And when the summons comes which none yet disregarded, though it will be a happy day for her, it will be a dark and sad one for you, when God, too will send for your mother.

Fancied Slights.

A very prolific and constant source of unprofitable sorrow is caused by fancied slights or small misunderstandings. Too much importance ought never to be attatched to these. We should not be too sensitive for comfort. We should not too tenaciously watch over our personal dignity. The trivial things which destroy our composure and invade our peace, are pitiful. An acquaintance is preoccupied, and passes us with a hurried recognition on the street; another fails to return our call, or seems to prefer the society of some one else to ours, and we are harrowed and hurt—perhaps bitterly resent the fancied injury. A noble-natured person will never resent the omissions of others, or falsely construe their motives. It is a good rule never to listen to the suggestions of pride, suspicion or jealousy, in regulating our intercourse with the world. Even where injuries have been received in return for benefits, if you would know the happiness that true nobility of soul confers upon its possessor, forgive, and as far as possible, forget. The brave only know how to forgive. It is the most refined and generous pitch of virtue human nature can arrive at. The coward, the mean soul, never forgives, but waits in ambush for an opportunity to strike in the dark, or stab in the back. The power of forgiving flows only from a strength and greatness, conscious of its own force and security, and above all the temptations of resenting every fruitless attempt to destroy its happiness. Small minds are hurt by small events; great minds see through and despise them. True self-respect is always full of respect towards others, and wastes no thought on petty meanness or the discourtesy that arises from ill-breading.

Women and Children as Drivers.

Is there not too much recklessness in the matter of trusting women and children to ride or drive alone. Of late years woman has become quite independent in this matter, and now she takes the reins without fear, and cares little whether she has a male escort or not when she is in the saddle. And so children; parents who can afford it give to their young ones a pony with a phaeton, or for horseback exercise, and the juveniles are actually annoyed by the presence of those of older growth. Now this is all very well in its way; but it is a serious question whether there is care enough exercised in the effort to inspire children with confidence in the use and management of horses. A prominent livery-man says that women and young girls will hire horses from his stable that he is almost afraid to trust to man's strong and experienced hand. He warns the adventurous females, but in vain, for they do not appear to know what fear is. Reliable as a good horse may be, the rider or the driver is exposed to constant danger arising from the chance of a horse becoming frightened and losing all self-control. Painful accidents are frequently reported resulting from the bad practice of taking too much risk in trusting a horse to a woman's or to a child's hand. It is all right enough to instruct a son or a daughter in the management of the animal. But it is a fearful thing at times, to see a horse driven at full speed with the reins in the hands of a child of tender years, or of a delicate woman, who really does not understand what risk she is taking, or realize how little it would take to change pleasurable excitement into terrible tragedy.

The Inventors of To-Day.

Inventing to-day, says the Iron Age, can be classed among the exact sciences. It is no longer a matter of happy accident or even of sound mechanical judgment. The world has progressed rapidly during the last thirty years' and to-day we find that the merely ingenious man can do but little that is of value to the world; in other words, something more than ingenuity is necessary to the production of a successful invention. Thirty-five years ago a good mechanic could hardly spend an hour in a shop without seeing an opportunity for an improvement in something, and at that time what was true in one shop was true everywhere. Since then a whole generation has been steadily at work improving and inventing; mere ingenuity has exhausted its powers, and even originality has but a limited field in which to seek profit in inventing. The first task of the inventor now is to discover a want. He must then find out whether any attempts have been made to meet this want; if so, how, when, and by whom. In other words, he must learn the state of the art, so that he may avoid traversing the footsteps of others who have failed. These are not matters which can be guessed at; they call for careful study, and when he has learned all he can upon the subject, he is ready to attack the problem intelligently, not before.

Money for a Rainy Day.

"For six years my daughter was sick from kidney and other disorders. We had used up our savings on doctors, when our dominie advised us to try Parker's Ginger Tonic. Four bottles effected a cure, and as a dollar's worth has kept our family well over a year, we have been able to lay by money again for a rainy day."—A Poor Man's Wife.

Rest for Headache.

Dr. Day says, in a late lecture; whatever be the plan of treatment decided upon, rest is the first principle to inculcate in every severe headache. Rest, which the busy man and anxious mother cannot obtain so long as they can manage to keep about, is one of the first remedies for every headache, and we should never cease to enforce it. The brain, when excited, as much needs quiet and repose as a fractured limb or an inflamed eye, and it is obvious that the chances of shortening the seizure and arresting the pain will depend on our power to have this carried out effectually. It is a practical lesson to keep steadily in view, in that there may lurk behind a simple headache some lesion of unknown magnitude which may remain stationary if quietude cannot be maintained. There is a point worth attending to in the treatment of all headaches. See that the head is elevated at night, and the pillow hard; for, if it be soft, the head sinks into it and becomes hot, which with some people is enough to provoke an attack in the morning if sleep has been long and heavy.

How to Save.

All hard workers are subject to bilious attacks, which may end in dangerous illness. Parker's Ginger Tonic will keep the kidneys and liver active, and by preventing the attack save much sickness, loss of time and expense. Delay at such time means danger.—Detroit Press. See other column.

The scene of the Mountain Meadows massacre is now the very picture of desolation. Before the Mormons murdered 131 innocent men and women there in 1857, the Meadows were known far and wide as a paradise in the desert, with an abundance of grass, crystal streams and ever flowing springs. To-day the grass is gone, the water courses are dried up, and nothing but a dreary waste marks the once beautiful spot. It is said that the earth is also sinking, and the bones which were collected after the massacre, though thrice buried, continue to reappear, while settlers in the vicinity shun the spot as haunted, and say that the winds from the Meadows bring piercing cries for help to their ears.

DR. A. TRASK'S MAGNETIC OINTMENT.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

ALL SORES, CUTS, BRUISES, SPRAINS, BURNS, SORE THROAT, LAMENESS, RHEUMATISM, PILES, INFLAMMATION of LUNGS and BOWELS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, SALT RHEUM, CHILBLAINS, AFFECTIONS of the SPINE, ERYSIPELAS, NERVOUS IRRITATION, and all disorders attendant with INFLAMMATION.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve, and ligament is searched and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country we simply ask those readers of this notice who have never used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should feel perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Price 25 and 40 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

Sheriff Washington, of Bay City, has discovered that over 20 saloon keepers in that city have filed no bonds, and has given them just 24 hours notice in which to comply with the law.

The many Michigan friends of Dr. and Mrs. Henry A. Reynolds will be interested in knowing that a young 10½ pounds orator made his advent in the home of the reformer at Wakefield, Mass., on February 28.

Hamilton, McClure & Co., of Bay City, are finishing a reservoir to hold brine, 260 feet long, 125 feet wide and 18 feet deep. It will be lined with driven piles, packed with clay, and is by all the biggest hole in the valley.

The loss by the fire in the store of Wm. Bennett & Co., at Jackson, is much larger than at first estimated.—The loss is now placed at $40,000 to $50,000, and is fully insured. The firm carries an immense stock and has $100,000 insurance.

A crowd of Climax sports secretly gathered at Mrs. Cook's barn to witness an awful combat between a coon and a cat, and retired in disgust because the brutes that were to do the fighting put the other brutes to shame by refusing to quarrel.

Some of the Ann Arbor young men thought they would have a little fun with "Uncle" Calley, a well known character of that village, whose weakness is snuff. They doctored a package of the nasal tonic with cayenne, offered it as a remedy for his catarrh, and prepared to laugh consumedly.—The cayenne warmed the old man's bones and inspired him with so much muscular vigor, that the young men are likely to remember the joke as long as "Uncle" Bailey.

The State Military Board, in session at Lansing, has let a contract to Guy F. Hinchman, of Detroit, to furnish thirty tents, 16x32, 12 feet high, for thirty companies, as mess tents, one for each company, for the coming encampment, as each company must subsist itself, the companies receiving in money the amount allowed per man of seventy-five cents per day.—This will do away with the fault heretofore found with bad rations furnished by contractors, or the contract system.

Tom Riley, who works in the Stoney Creek quarry near Jackson, becoming annoyed at the inefficient work performed by the blasting powder in use, determined to put in a charge that would do some good. He therefore drilled a much larger hole than usual, loaded it with 20 pounds of powder, and touched it off. Such a noise and shaking up was never experienced before in Jackson county. It seemed as if the very foundations of the deep were broken up. Eight car loads of fragments of rock were thrown out. One large piece weighing 160 pounds went rushing through the air, cutting off a yellow oak, 18 inches through, about 40 rods away, and landing about one-half mile from the place of discharge.

Cultivation of Self-Respect.

A child that is uniformly treated with courtesy, with consideration, with justice, will unconsciously deem himself worthy of such treatment, and will become worthy of it, unless he is by nature wholly base; and he will unconsciously treat others as he is treated. If is a fearful thing to give a child the lie, to accuse him of stealing, to accustom him to unexpected and unmerited blows and cuffs. He may merit punishment, but the wise parent never will admit into the household vocabulary the terrible words "liar" and "thief," and will never permit in himself or others the hasty blow, the bitter taunt, the stinging epithet. The refined and educated parent can never tolerate such language as we have indicated. Bitter words are more cruel than blows, and inflict more lasting injuries. Care in the choice of associates will do much to foster self-respect in a child. Some mothers think their sons and daughters can go where they choose and play with whom they please, and come out all well in the end. There never was a greater mistake. As well might one think it no difference what air we breathe. Children are quicker than we to catch the tone of associates, to pick up slang words, bad grammar, vulgar ideas—these often seem to be taken in through the very pores, as typhoid poison is, when least expected. Care in the choice of reading will do much to foster due self-respect in a child. The boy who grows up with a familiar knowledge of Washington, of Franklin, of Lincoln, and other great men who have been the glory of the nations in which they have been conspicuous, will be far more likely to find his mind filled with noble images, with high ideals, with lofty ambitions, than one who reads sensational newspapers, dime novels, and the comic almanac. Any soil that yields abundantly must contain in itself elements of fertility, and barren soil may have elements artificially supplied to them.

A Pile of Living Serpents.

In the savannas of Isacubo, in Guiana, I saw the most wonderful, the most terrible spectacle that can be seen; and although it be not uncommon to the inhabitants, no traveler has ever mentioned it. We were ten men on horseback, two of whom took the lead, in order to sound the passages, whilst I preferred to skirt the great forests. One of the blacks who formed the vanguard returned at full gallop, and called to me, "Here, sir; come and see serpents in a pile!" He pointed out to me something elevated in the middle of the savanna, which appeared like a bundle of arms. One of my company then said, "This is certainly one of those assemblages of serpents which heap themselves to each other after a violent tempest. I have heard of these but have never seen any. Let us proceed cautiously, and not go to near." When we were within twenty paces of it, the terror of our horses prevented our near approach, to which, however, none of us were inclined. Suddenly the pyramidal mass became agitated; horrible sounds issued from it; and thousands of serpents rolled spirally on each other, shooting forth out of their hideous heads, and presenting their envenomed darts and fiery eyes to us. I own I was one of the first to draw back. But when I saw this formidable phalanx remained at its post, and appeared to be more disposed to defend itself than attack us, I rode round it in order to view its order of battle, which faced the enemy on every side. I then sought what could be the design of this numerous assemblage; and I concluded that this species of serpents dreaded some colossean enemy, which might be the great serpent, or the cayman; and that, having seen this enemy, they unite themselves in order to resist him in a mass.—Baron Von Humboldt.

Rapidity of Time's Flight.

Swiftly glide the years of our lives. They follow each other like the waves of the ocean. Memory calls up the persons we once knew—the scenes in which we were once actors. They appear before the mind like the phantoms of a night vision. Behold, the boy, rejoicing in the gayety of his soul! The wheels of Time cannot move too rapidly for him. The light of hope dances in his eyes; the smile of expectation plays with his lips. He looks forward to long years of joy to come; his spirit burns within him when he hears of great men and mighty deeds; he longs to mount the hill of ambition, to tread the path of honor, to hear the shouts of applause. Look at him again. He is now in the meridian of life; care has stamped its wrinkles upon his brow; disappointment has dimmed the luster of his eye; sorrow has thrown its gloom upon his countenance. He looks backward upon the waking dreams of his youth, and sighs for their futility. Each revolving year seems to diminish something from his little stock of happiness, and discovers that the season of youth, when the pulse of anticipation beats high, is the only season of enjoyment. Who is he of aged locks? His form is bent, and totters; his footsteps move but rapidly toward the tomb. He looks back upon the past; his days appear to have been few; the magnificence of the great is to him vanity; the hilarity of youth, folly; he considers how soon the gloom of death must overshadow the one and disappoint the other. The world presents little to attract and nothing to delight him. A few more years of infirmity, inanity and pain must consign him to idiocy or the grave. Yet this was the gay, the generous, the high souled boy who beheld the ascending path of life strewn with flowers without a thorn. Such is human life; but such cannot be the ultimate destinies of man.

If you are suffering with low dep depressed spirits, loss of appetite, general debility, disordered blood, weak constitution, headache, or any disease of a bilious nature, by all means procure a bottle of Electric Bitters. You will be surprised to see the rapid improvement that will follow; you will be inspired with new life; strength and activity will return; pain and misery will cease, and henceforth you will rejoice in the praise of Electric Bitters. Sold at 50 cents a bottle at C. A. Wright & Co.

A legal gentleman met a brother lawyer on Court street one day last week, and the following conversation took place: "Well, Judge, how is business?" "Dull, dull; I am living on faith and hope." "Very good, but I have got past you for, I'm living on charity."

Dry Curing Pork and Beef.

Mr. Gillette informed me that he had for a number of years practiced, with entire success and great satisfaction, a method of dry curing, which supplied far better and sweeter bacon and ham than the usual brining process. After killing the carcasses, dry and thoroughly cool 24 hours or so. The sides and hams are then rubbed over with molasses—he uses the Porto Rico. Salt is heated in an iron vessel to a dry fine powder, and almost "red hot," when it is spread quickly over the smeared pork, and when cool enough is thoroughly mixed in with the hand. After about three days the same process is repeated. They then lie in a dry and cool place for a couple of weeks, when they are ready for smoking. No brine is used to toughen the pork or hams, or affect the flavor. The smoking is continued at intervals, with care not to get up a heat by a continuous fire. Two fires a day are made with corn cobs, or dry oak or hickory. The total smoking, that is the time the meat is totally surrounded with smoke, is 100 to 120 hours in all. After smoking enough, the bacon or hams are packed dry in barrels, or hung up and kept dry and cool. That to be kept into or through the next summer is rolled in plenty of newspapers, packed in barrels, and covered over with a thick layer of dry wood ashes. He says he has never lost a pound, and never failed to have bacon and hams sweet and delicious to the taste, and commanding the highest price in the market. We should add, that in curing very large hams by this process, as a safety precaution, he makes small openings down to the bone joints, and fills them with the hot salt.

He cures beef in the same way, but only puts it through the salting process. Indeed, some of his neighbors give pork and hams only the first salting, but he deems the second application, above described, as better, and insuring perfect success always.—Cor. American Agriculturist.

Speak Up, Young Men!

Young man, when you see anything you want, ask for it like a man. If you want to borrow five dollars of a man, or if you want to marry his daughter, don't sidle up to him and hang on to your hat and talk politics and religion and weather, and tell old, stale jokes whereof you can't remember the point, until you worry the old man into nervous irritation. Go at him with a full head of steam on and your bow ports open, like an ironclad pulling for a shore battery. Snort, paw, and shake your head if you feel like it, no matter if it does make him look astonished. Better astonish than bore him. Go into his heart or his pocket-book, or both, it amounts to the same thing, like a brindle bull with a curl in his forehead, charging a red merino dress, eyes on fire, tail up and the dust a flying. Then you'll fetch him. Or, possibly, he may fetch you. But never mind; you'll accomplish something and aren't afraid to speak what's on your mind. And that's a great deal more than you'll accomplish by the other method. You needn't be cheeky, but you ought to be straightforward.

Kellogg's Columbian Oil has proved beyond a doubt that it is a safe and reliable remedy, and will cure all aches and pains incident to humanity. Our bodies need strengthening and repairing as much as the house we live in. Old persons are more subject than others to diseases of the kidneys and urinary organs, and the soothing, curative and healing properties of Columbian Oil in extreme cases seem almost incredible.

Berry Bushes.

An agricultural paper says: "We have discarded the plan of allowing red raspberries and blackberries to sucker and grow all over and between the rows, and now keep the cultivator running through them every two weeks, cutting off all suckers that come up between the rows, and giving plants in rows double the chance." This may be considered good advice, and it means use the thumb and finger to pinch in time. In regard to blackberries and raspberries, it is a great mistake to allow them to grow up tall and spindling, and then in the Fall or next Spring have to cut off one-half to two-thirds of the wood and cane to make stock to bear fruit. Watch the new growth, and when it gets two to three feet high (owing to stockiness of plant) nip off the tip end of the new growth with the fingers, or with a knife or shears.

In the house of commons, the motion to postpone the order of the day was carried by 300 to 167. Secretary Forster stated that the government needed the whole support of parliament to uphold the law in Ireland. Mitchel Henry said that, in the event of a general election, seventy Parnellites would be returned.

Queen Victoria, after spending two days in London, returned to Windsor at 5:25 o'clock Thursday evening. As she was stepping into her carriage, a resident of Southsea, named Roderick MacLean, deliberately discharged a revolver at her, but the bullet missed the royal target. Instantly the weapon was knocked from the hands of the assassin, who evidently intended to fire again, and some Eton scholars made an attempt to lynch the fellow. The queen at once drove off to the castle, and sent back an equerry to know if anyone had been hurt. Ponsonby, the queen's secretary, obtained all possible information at the police station, and telegraphed it to Gladstone. The czar of Russia, the empress of Austria, and the emperor of Germany telegraphed messages of sympathy, and the cabinet sent a dispatch expressing gratification at the failure of the attempt. The queen held her usual dinner party. No bullet-marks were found on the royal carriage. Two chambers of the assassin's revolver had been discharged, and fourteen ball cartridges were found on his person. MacLean is a grocer's assistant, 27 years of age, and is pronounced sane by physicians. He says hunger prompted him to the deed. Secretary Frelinghuysen sent a cablegram conveying the congratulations of the American people on the queen's escape from injury, and sympathetic messages have been received at Windsor from every quarter. When the carriage containing the prisoner left the town hall, Friday, twenty men endeavored to overturn it. The discovery has been made that MacLean was discharged from the Wells asylum last September, and has until recently been an inmate of the asylum at Weston-Super-Mare.

low Concordia, Miss., and five persons were drowned.

In the British house of commons, a resolution declaring void the election of Davitt was passed by 208 to 20. Cowan gave notice that he would move an address to the queen for a free pardon of Davitt.

Mrs. Thrush, of Monmouth Junction, Wis., left her 4-year-old daughter alone in the house and went to a neighboring residence. The child overturned a lamp, and burned herself so that death soon ensued.

WASHINGTON NOTES.

Every Territory in the United States has applied to congress for admission into the Union as a State.

The house military committee has begun the discussion of a bill to remove the charge of desertion against volunteer soldiers. No immediate action is expected.

Judge Advocate General Swaim left Friday night for Cleveland to confer with Mrs. Garfield concerning matters connected with the estate of the late president.

The report that President Arthur has referred the Fitz-John Porter case to the attorney-general is denied at the department of justice.

The president has nominated Cornelius A. Logan, of Illinois, as minister to Chili, and J. B. Weaver, of North Carolina, as United States consul at Bahia.

Mr. Blaine's address, which has been so highly praised on all sides, will probably be printed in book form and handsomely bound. Representatives in congress will be furnished a limited number of copies for distribution.

The senate committee on pensions has appointed a sub-committee to confer with the adjutant general and surgeon general of the army and the commissioner of pensions, with a view to recommending some method of expediting the adjudication of pension claims.

The appropriations committee has completed the consular appropriation bill. Paraguay is consolidated with the mission to Brazil, and Uruguay with the Argentine republic. The consulate to Lisbon is abolished, and a new consulate at Antigua is established.

The naval committees of congress have inspected the unfinished monitors at Wilmington and Chester. Chairman Harris favors putting on them sufficient work to enable them to be launched, when they can be taken to fresh water and kept at slight expense.

Minister Zamacona has complained to the State department that United States Indians have invaded the State of Sonora, Mexico, and committed numerous depredations. The matter has been referred to the secretary of the interior for his action. The Indians are from the San Carlos, Arizona, reservation.

A bill giving officers below the rank of major who have served either in the volunteer or regular service in the same grade for fifteen years the pay and allowance of the grade next above that in which they have so served without promotion will be favorably reported by the house military committee.

The bill proposing to appropriate $10,000,000 in the construction of new vessels for the United States navy provides that half of these ships shall be built at the several navy-yards of the government. This will give the southern navy-yards the construction of one or two ships, and John Roach will probably be lucky about the rest.

The House Judiciary Committee is considering a bill which will probably be reported favorably by them. It deprives railroads of the right to remove suits against them from State to Federal Courts in States other than that in which they are technically resident. This bill is directly in the interest of poor litigants, who are often deprived of justice under the present law.

An Ohio congressman has received a letter from a constituent, who is a leading rope manufacturer, pleading for the privilege of making the rope with which Guiteau will be hanged. He bases his request on the doctrine of states rights, claiming that Garfield's murderer should be hanged with an Ohio rope. He also proposes that the rope be made of silk twisted in the patriotic tricolor. The request has been referred to Warden Crocker.

The report of the board of army engineers on the plan for the reclamation of the Potomac flats commends the adoption, substantially, of what is known as the Twining plan, and contains no new features. The maximum cost of this plan will be $2,500,000, but with several modifications a less sum will be required. The report will at once be transmitted to congress, and if early action is taken work will begin in the spring. The removal of the long bridge is not a part of the plan.

The minority report of the house election committee on the Utah election case is completed. The question of polygamy, in its moral or other respects, is not touched upon. Mr. Cannon, the minority think, is entitled to a seat under the constitution, laws, and the precedents of the house, which are all one way. The report was prepared by Mr. Moulton, of Illinois, and it is regarded as very able and exhaustive. The minority who sign the report giving Cannon his seat unite in the general sentiment of the country that polygamy is a great moral evil, and they will favor any proper bill to stamp it out.

A statement is being extensively circulated that Gen. Sherman not only opposes the bill placing Gen. Grant on the retired list, but is working actively to defeat it. Senator Sherman says this is not true, but that, on the contrary, his brother, the general, was at the senate when the bill was under discussion, and urged all his friends to support it. He felt almost a personal interest in the passage of the measure, and did all that he could, consistent with his position, to secure favorable action. The story that he wants the bill held back in the house is utterly devoid of truth.

The census bureau has completed its estimate of the population of Utah territory, classified as Mormons, Gentiles, Apostates, Josephites, and doubtful. Of the Mormons there are 120,283, nearly 49,000 of whom are more than 21 years old, while 40,000 are less than 9 years old. Of the Gentiles there are only 14,156, of whom a little more than one-half are more than 21 years old. There are 6,988 Apostate Mormons, 820 Josephite Mormons, and 1,716 persons who are classified as doubtful. Of the Mormons, nearly 37,000 are of foreign birth.

There is a spirit of inquiry on foot which will break out in the shape of questions to the secretary of war, in regard to the money voted his department for mileage. The annual allowance of $200,000 is all gone, and there is a demand for $60,000 more. Twenty thousand dollars has been voted to keep things running until the matter can be inquired into. There is a belief on the part of several who have been watching the matter that this $200,000 was used up in unauthorized payment of mileage for the Yorktown trip, for extensive traveling to and from Washington on "orders," when only private ends are to be served, etc.

There has been a great deal of speculation in the newspapers with reference to John Russell Young and the Chinese mission, and as to whether he would accept the place or not. It seems that Mr. Young desired very much to go to Japan for literary reasons, and was not so much inclined to go to China, where the field, from a literary standpoint, has been pretty thoroughly worked over, and where, especially under the new treaties, the labor would be so great as to practically preclude any time for literary matters. It may be definitely settled, however, at last, that Mr. Young will be offered the place, and that he will accept it.

An important meeting to further the Hennepin canal project was held at the Riggs house. Among those present were Vice-President David Davis, Secretary of War Lincoln, Representatives Henderson and Chalmers, Mr. Cutler, of Ottawa, and Mr. Morton, all of whom made speeches. Nearly every northern State was represented in the gathering. After a series of informal addresses a resolution was passed to organize a committee, which will be hereafter appointed, to take charge of the subject. While nothing was definitely decided upon, there was a useful interchange of views and suggestions were made which will bear fruit later on in the history of the canal.

The senate recently called upon the secretary of the interior for a statement showing the general nature of the frauds discovered, if any, in the payment of pensions. Commissioner Dudley, in his answer, says that many cases heretofore called fraudulent are not intentionally so, and shows that claimants frequently fail because they are ignorant of the provisions of the law and the rulings of the office. Special examiners discovered that the claimant does not deserve a pension under the law, although the application was honestly made. The records show that since July 1, 1878, there have been investigated 9,608 cases, out of which the names of 2,188 pensioners were dropped from the rolls and 1,975 pending claims were rejected. There grew out of these investigations 581 criminal prosecutions, which resulted in 206 indictments and 169 convictions. In this period 206 attorneys were suspended from practice before the department, 64 debarred, 113 disbarred, and 169 dropped. Taking up 500 cases in which the evidence of fraud seemed strongest, 232 being cases of invalids, and 268 of widows or dependent relatives, it is shown that in these cases 2,538 false affidavits were made by civilians, 252 by comrades, and 380 by officers. In these cases there were 113 forgeries.

CONGRESSIONAL.

SENATE.

FEB. 28.—In the United States senate, Mr. Davis submitted the resolutions of the Chicago (historical) society, recommending the purchase of the Franklin manuscripts. Mr. Windom reported a resolution instructing the committee on foreign relations to report on the alleged abstraction of important papers from the office of the secretary of state, as also upon the charges that our representatives in France and Peru had been concerned in contracts with those governments, or whether other officials had been so involved. Mr. Vest introduced a bill for a public building at Hannibal, and Mr. Ingalls presented an act authorizing the president to appoint Alfred Pleasonton a brevet major general and place his name on the retired list. The postoffice appropriation bill was passed. The Chinese immigration bill was then taken up. While Mr. Miller was airing his views, four members of the Chinese legation appeared in the gallery, but retired as soon as they learned what subject was under discussion. A short executive session was held.

MARCH 1.—In the senate, Mr. McDill presented resolutions of the Iowa legislature asking the amendment of the patent laws to prevent unjust exactions. Mr. Vest introduced a bill to prohibit the issue of notes by national banks organized or reorganized after July 1. The resolutions for an investigation into the Chili-Peruvian imbroglio, after being amended to include any promise of intervention by officials of the United States, were passed. Mr. Voorhees made a long speech upon the necessity of better accommodations for the congressional library. The Chinese bill was taken up, and Mr. Hoar spoke against the measure. Mr. Kellogg introduced a resolution for an appropriation sufficient, when combined with local revenues, to give all children in the states and territories a good common-school education.

MAR. 2.—In the senate, Mr. Platt made a favorable report on the bill to regulate practice in patent cases. Mr. Gorman offered a resolution directing the postmaster-general to transmit a statement of the cost of fast mails and a list of railroad companies, which performed the services. Mr. Vance offered a resolution, which was laid over, reciting that in the Sixth district of North Carolina the cost of collecting internal revenue was 60 per cent. greater than in any other district in the United States, and asking for a committee of three to investigate charges against the officials. Mr. Conger made a favorable report on the house bill to better the life-saving service, with amendments providing for pensions for widows and children of keepers losing their lives. Messrs. Farley and Hoar debated the Chinese immigration bill, when the senate went into executive session. Roscoe Conkling was confirmed as associate justice by 39 yeas to 12 nays, among the latter being Hoar, Dawes, Morrill, and Hawley. The nomination of Aaron A. Sargent to be minister to Germany was approved without division.

MAR. 3.—In the senate, Mr. Butler presented a memorial from citizens of South Carolina for national aid in the education of the youth of that state. Mr. Hoar reported adversely on the petitions in regard to the celebration of the discovery of the mouth of the Mississippi. Bills were passed—to compile and print the naval history of the war, to reduce the charge for licenses to engineers and pilots, and to make Denver a port of delivery. The Chinese bill gave rise to a prolonged and spirited debate, participated in by Farley, Ingall, and Miller, of California. Miller said if Chinese immigration remained unchecked, sooner or later we would have to choose between the civilization of our own people, our own religion, and our country, and that of China. He could not see how any man, studying the character of that people, their habits, traditions, and the accompaniments of their civilization, could believe that a republic is possible with numbers of Chinese here following out the the habits, traditions, and laws to which they had been accustomed. This measure was necessary to relieve the apprehensions of the citizens of the pacific coast, and avert an impending evil. The bill was laid over to Monday.

HOUSE.

FEB. 28.—In the house of representatives, Mr. Gibson introduced a joint resolution for a committee of sixteen to attend the anniversary of the discovery of the mouth of the Mississippi river. Bills were passed to authorize the bridging of the Mississippi at Keithsburg, Ill., and appropriating $100,000 to continue work on the harbor of Galveston. Three reports were submitted in regard to the Utah contested election, the majority favoring the rejection of both Campbell and Cannon. The house then went into committee of the whole on the military academy appropriation bill, which was passed. Mr. Robinson introduced a bill to organize the National Labor League Railway Company of America, to run from New York to Council Bluffs, with a capital of $40,000,000.

MAR. 1.—In the house a bill to make Denver a port of delivery was passed. Bills were reported favorably to stop the coinage of trade dollars and exchange those now out for standard silver pieces; to adopt a meter to measure the quantity and test the gravity and temperature of distilled and malt liquors; to provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia; for the distribution of pure vaccine virus, and for the erection of a public building at Detroit. The contested Louisiana election case of Lanier vs. King was dismissed. A resolution was adopted that the secretary of the interior examine and report upon the bill to create a sinking fund for the Sioux City and Pacific road. The Indian appropriation bill, covering $4,920,203, was perfected and passed.

MAR. 2.—In the house, the Oregon contested election case of McDowell vs. George was dismissed. Debate on the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill, which sets aside $1,108,530, took a wide range, and resulted only in outlining party action in the future. The senate amendments to the post-route bill were concurred in. A resolution was offered by Mr. Springer, (Ill.) for printing 10,000 copies of the record of the war of the rebellion. Bills were introduced establishing a retired list for non-commissioned officers of the army, and confirming to Ohio the title of marsh land.

MAR. 3.—In the house Mr. Gibson introduced a bill to appropriate $6,113,000 for improvements along the Mississippi river. A bill was passed to reduce fees for licenses to officers of steam vessels. The committee on foreign affairs was granted leave to sit during sessions of the house, to investigate the Chili-Peruvian correspondence. The entire afternoon was spent on the private calendar, passing bills for the relief of John Morris, John Trainor, granting a pension to Mark A. Lewis, and to settling the claim of the heirs of Col. Stephen H. Long, United States topographical engineer, for the use of an article patented by him.

MAR. 4.—In the house, a bill was passed for holding terms of the district court at Wichita, Kan. A resolution was adopted to dismiss the Louisiana contested election case of Smith versus Robertson. Mr. Horr reported a bill to prevent shipping adulterated food and drugs into the United States. The consular and diplomatic appropriation bill was completed in committee of the whole, but the final vote was deferred to Monday. The salary of the consul at Liverpool was fixed at $6,000. The consul at Jerusalem was given an advance of $500. Mr. Reed presented a petition from Yankton against the admission of Dakota as a state.

In falling, the post struck Mr. Hause on the head and knocked him senseless.—When he came to his senses he called for help, and the men at the planing mill heard him and came to his assistance. Mr. Hause was laid up for several days, but is now able to be around again.

DOWNS' ELIXIR.

N. H. DOWNS'

Vegetable Balsamic

ELIXIR

This valuable medicine is purely vegetable, the discovery of which was the result of many years' close study, in order to discover the cause, the symptoms, and the cure—viz:

Consumption, Coughs, Colds, Catarrh, Croup, Asthma, Pleurisy, Hoarseness, Influenza, Spitting Blood, Bronchitis, and every species of oppression of the Chest and Lungs. In all cases where this Elixir has been duly administered its efficacy has been invariably manifested, convincing the most incredulous that is not incurable, if properly attended to. Consumption, at its commencement, is but a slight irritation of the membrane which covers the Lungs; then an inflamation, when the cough is more observable, but rather dry; then becomes local fever and the pulse more frequent, the cheeks flushed and chills more common. This Elixir in curing the above complaints, operates so as to remove all morbid irritations and inflamation from the lungs to the surface, and finally expel them from the system. It facilitates expectoration.

It heals the ulcerated surfaces

and relieves the cough and makes the breathing easy. It supports the strength and at the same time reduces the fever. It is free from strong opiate and astringent articles, which are of so drying a nature as to be great danger of destroying the patient; whereas this medicine never dries or stops the cough, but, by removing the cause, generally destroys the hectic before the cough is entirely gone. Consequently, when the cough is cured the patient is well. Send address for pamphlet, giving full directions for cure of pulmonary diseases.

Rev. George Wilson, pastor of the Congregational church of this place, has resigned his position. We believe he contemplates entering another field of labor of a different character. His resignation causes regret in the hearts of many. He ends his pastoral duties here in two weeks.

A telegram announcing the death of Mr. John Collins, of Zanesville, Ohio, was received here on Wednesday last. James McAdam started there immediately and brought home the remains Tuesday noon, when it was learned that his death was the result of apoplexy. He was for many years a dyer in the Clinton woolen mills, and but a few weeks ago left here for the place at which his death occurred. He leaves a wife and two children to mourn his loss. They have the sympathy of the whole community.

MACON CENTER.

The grange hall association will give a maple sugar social next Wednesday evening, March 22. It is about time the hall had a benefit. It has served the people well for a number of years with but little recompense. A general supply of refreshments will be served and a jolly time after supper. Everyone invited.

Good weather for politics. We will probably be able to announce next week a call for an anti-monopoly and temperance caucus.

By request we give the following problem: Two farmers, which we will designate as Hank and Frank, each sold Jack Stedd a number of sheep, to be delivered at Britton station. They drove the sheep together, and when put on the scales weighed 1910 lbs. Frank's sheep were then taken off, and Hank's weighed 1140, which leaves 770 lbs. as the weight of Frank's. It was afterwards discovered that the scales were 24 lbs out of balance in the buyer's favor. Required the true weight of each flock. There is a difference of opinion among the natives as to the above, and for the sake of harmony a solution is solicited.

NOTE.—We give our figures on the problem above as follows: The first man's share of the loss was 14.32 pounds, the second man's share was 9.68 pounds. Total 24 pounds. Is this answer correct? If so, what is the best method of solution?—ED.

There is much talk of an effort being made this spring to raise money for the purpose of graveling the turnpike from the Ridge road east. If there is ever a time when our people will be ready to vote an appropriation for this purpose it will be this spring, after having been obliged to wade through the mud for six months. Think of it because you will hear more about this matter in the near future.

It is currently reported that an entirely new registration is required this spring by an act passed in 1881. Act 142 of the session laws of 1881 does require a new registration this year but not until next fall.

S. P. Smith lost a valuable cow recently and his friends made him a surprise of $40, cash, with which to get another.

Next week Wednesday evening will be the next meeting of the Temperance Alliance. The discussion of the question, Resolved, That the drinker of intoxicating liquor is in a greater degree responsible for the evils of intemperance than the vender, will be the main feature of the program.

The new highway law provides that the highway tax shall be assessed on a money basis and paid in money instead of labor; provided that 12 days before the election twelve freeholders in the township file a written demand with the town clerk that the town board shall submit the question to the vote of the electors, and that a majority of electors so determine. Those townships which want this question submitted this spring must have their written demand on file in the clerk's office by the 22nd.

Why not extend our local telegraph line into town? It would be a cheap way for those who wish to learn to operate, and would be convenient for those connected. It might connect with the post office, express office, business offices, hotels, and all others who might wish to learn the art. We understand that the owners of our line are willing to do this. R. J. W. Bowen, who is manager of our line will cheerfully answer all questions in regard to expense of construction and operating the same.

Now and Then.

BY LOUISE CHANDLER MOULTON.

And had you loved me then, my dear,
And had you loved me there.
When still the sun was in the east
And hope was in the air—
When all the birds sang to the dawn
And I but sang to you,
Oh had you loved me then, my dear,
And had you then been true!

But ah! the day wore on, my dear,
And when the noon grew hot
The drowsy birds forgot to sing.
And you and I forgot
To talk of love, or live for faith,
Or hold ourselves a mete,
And now our hearts are shutterless,
Our sun is in the west.

The Youth Who Played Before He Looked.

A youth went forth to serenade
The lady whom he loved the best,
And passed beneath the mansion's shade
Where rest his charmer used to rest.

He surprised in the morning light
Came dancing o'er the hilltops' rim
But no fair maiden blessed his sight,
And all seemed dark and drear to him.

With heart aglow and eyes ablaze
He drew much nearer than before,
When, to his horror and amaze,
He saw "To Let" upon the door.

MY DISREPUTABLE FRIEND, COLONEL COYOTE CLARK

When I told the officers of my church in that newest city of the newest of the Southwestern States that Mrs. Clark had called upon me with the view of joining our society, those officials were struck with dismay, for the Colonel had shot her former husband.

"I am glad to know her," I insisted.

"And you would like to have her husband, Coyote Clark, call, would you?" Mr. Jones asked it derisively, but I replied as promptly, "I will be glad to have him do so! He shall be welcome. That is what I am here for. It is the worst people who need me most."

"Do they? Well I am anxious to see what will come of it. Colonel Coyote Clark!" and Mr. Brown evidently concided in the sarcastic exclamation of Mr. Jones. As soon as they were gone I planted the dreaded reprobate in imagination before me.

"It is plain," I said to myself, "that he is a large, red-faced, bushy-whiskered, boisterous man, a bully and a blackguard. Doubtless the sobriquet of Coyote, prairie fox, has come to and clings to him as naturally as the name of Bob, Tom, Bill to other men. I am not afraid of the ruffian," and if my fists did not instinctively clench themselves my manner became in anticipation frozen and defiant.

A few weeks afterward, and when I had forgotten the disreputable Colonel, there called upon me one afternoon a gentleman whom I knew at a glance to be a book or insurance agent. He was an undersized man, but well-formed and remarkably well-dressed, closely-shaven, and whose singularly youthful face was made the more engaging by a pair of frank and laughing eyes. There was that in them which grasped me as cordially as did his hand, which I observed was as small and white as that of a lady, and which adhered to my own with a curious magnetic warmth. His voice too and whole bearing had such an innocent and childlike sincerity as won me at once. No one could be less intrusive or more respectful, and during our conversation upon general topics I observed that he listened most attentively to me and with more than his eyes fastened upon mine. "I will subscribe for his book whatever it is," I murmured to myself at last. "If he is an insurance agent how can I refuse to take out a policy?" But he only remarked, as after a very pleasant visit he arose to leave, "I am pleased to know, sir, that my wife desires to unite with the church."

"Your wife," I stammered.

"Yes, sir, Mrs. Clark. My name is Colonel Clark. I dare say," he added with the laugh of a school-boy, "that you have heard of me as Coyote Clark. That is only their fun. For although I am not myself a Christian, as I regret to say, no man sir, has a deeper respect for religion," and his face had taken on the sincerest seriousness.

That was the way we began our more than mutual acquaintance. Every day I heard of some fresh rascality of my new friend. He was a gambler, was horribly profane when enraged, could become more thoroughly intoxicated ever night and show less signs of it next morning than any other toper. When crossed in his plans he could and did kill his man without a symptom of regret for it afterward. It is absurd to suppose that I liked him notwithstanding all this because he named a race horse after me. It was a shame, but I did like him. Like most men I was born twins, not like Chang and Eng, for mine is the innermost quality of Jacob and Esau in eternal strife, and the hidden Esau in me, shocking as it is to confess, sprang forth to greet him every time we met, as we very often did. It may have been because I had so intense a desire to save the man from himself and impending doom. "He is sure to be killed in the end," I urged upon myself; "he is apt to be shot down any moment; whatever he does I will not break with him—will do my best to win him over."

He gave me every opportunity to do so. After a very long probation his wife became a member of my church. Not only was she a regular attendant, but she brought her husband with her. On prayer-meeting nights, when it was too cold or the rain was falling in torrents, whoever else was absent it was not Colonel Coyote Clark nor his wife. Every child was in the Sunday-school. During sermons the Colonel gave me his, if not devout, at least undivided attention. I met a cordial reception when I visited at his house. I was a little surprised when, on calling one hot August evening, two or three of his youngest children raced in and out of the parlor as naked as the hour they were born, but they were very beautiful children, and were soon hustled off to bed, and the father sat listening for an hour after, and with sympathetic eyes, to all I could urge upon him as to a change of life.

As I knew at the outset, I cannot condense into limits so brief a tenth of what I would like to say of my friend. For, notwithstanding everything, I liked him; yes, and I like him to this hour! I recall the picnic-dinner he gave to the Sunday-school in the woods on a bright October day, the profuse generosity of the ....., then as always, who for some occult reason wore a ruffled shirt and was apparently the ideal of a refined gentleman. We had to repress and refuse his pecuniary gifts to the church. I believe he would have built us a new edifice had we allowed it.

"And you still think you can make a Christian of him?" The question was continually dashed upon me like cold water, and from, it seemed to me, every quarter. "I can but try!" I always said so, but it was with a sinking heart. My friend seemed to belong to a wholly different species somehow, always so cordial, so attentive, so open to conviction, so frankly boyish and bright-faced, yet all things as I could not but know, the same unmitigated reprobate. Disasters overtook him in quick succession. His house was burned down, but he tracked the incendiary, killed him and was as cheerful as ever. His favorite son was blown up and burned to a crisp in his Christmas pyrotechnics. Another son, a handsome fellow, accidentally shot and killed a young negro with whom he was playing. A daughter not fifteen was assisted out of a back window one midnight by a lad not much older, and eloped to be married by me some weeks after to her abductor. A third son not ten years old had his clothes hidden while bathing in the river, and searched and found them only to take a small revolver out of the pockets, run still naked, after his mischievous companion and dangerously wound him. Through everything, Colonel Coyote Clark remained, as far as I could see, the same pleasant-faced, sincere-spoken, innocent-mannered and hopelessly wicked desperado.

"Now, is there anything I can do for you?" he reined in his horse at my gate one morning to ask, looking the picture of a cavalier, for he was captain of the Rangers and was off on a scout after the Indians. I made a request but forgot all about it until months after, he stopped on his return at my gate to give me the ox-hide quiver full of arrows, the medicine bag and bow of a Comanche. "He was a big chief," he said, "and I picked him off on purpose for you."

One morning, not long after, I saw him on the roof of a burning house helping to put out the flames at the peril of his life. The next day I heard the rapid cracking of revolvers down street. It was a little "difficulty" he was having, and I hastened past his dead enemy to find him dying on the sidewalk. His face brightened like that of a child when he saw me, and he gave me the same cordial and sympathetic attention as of old to all I had to say. I see his boyish and innocent-seeming face this moment, as smilingly unconscious of what concerned him most as a squirrel, without the faculty to care. "Anyhow I fetched him!" he laughed—and was dead.

But why is it that I liked him so much, so very much more than I do people so very much better? Why, oh why is it?—William M. Baker in Our Continent.

No End of Fun.

I arrived at a farmhouse in a wood, where a general of brigade and his staff had established themselves, whom I happened to know. While chatting with them on the chances of a skirmish before nightfall, and on the proximity of the enemy, a young officer came in, saying that from a point he had just left he could look right down into a part of the French position. This point he described to me as occupied by a half-dozen men, who had crept as far to the front as possible, and were now hiding behind an old ruined wall and watching the enemy unobserved. As he was going back there, I offered to accompany him and we crept through the brushwood and then made a quick run across a piece of open ground to a most picturesque fragment of ruin, which dominated the valley some 300 or 400 feet below, in which is situated the village of Freteval, then occupied, as well as the heights behind, by the French army. Peeping through the chinks of the ruin, I could see a French regiment marching along a road beneath us, within very comfortable rifle shot, apparently unaware of our proximity. I remained here jotting down notes for nearly an hour, and then, hearing some firing at a distance, determined to return to the carriage in order to go and see what it was. This I could either do by keeping in the woods all the time, which involved a long round, or by crossing an open plowed field, which was a saving of half the distance. As everything seemed quiet where I was, I determined on the latter course, and was laboring through the soft land, ankle deep in mud, when, bang! came a round shot, apparently aimed at me, and buried itself about twenty yards in the rear. To say that I took to my heels is a figure of speech; I had no heels; I had two mountains of mud clinging to my feet, which rendered running almost impossible. However, I did my best; and in the agony of my effort I sprawled headlong on my face at the very moment when another shot, better aimed, covered me with dirt. For at least ten minutes more was my solitary figure a target for that miserable French battery. I ceased to wonder that the French lost battles when they could waste valuable ammunition in this way. I heard shouts of laughter proceed from a German regiment hidden in the wood for which I was making, as they saw my frantic efforts to increase my speed, as each whistling, shrieking ball warned me not to dally. Once they actually expended a shell upon me, but it cracked in the air a hundred feet above me. At last, panting with fatigue, I scrambled into the wood, and I must say that I was most sympathetically and kindly received by the Germans as a return for the amusement I had afforded them. — Blackwood's Magazine.

Marriage in the Navy.

Many a young officer's professional reputation has been ruined, and his professional prospects killed, by an unfortunate alliance, or by constant application and wire-pulling to avoid the service that belongs to him by right, for family considerations, and many a man whose ambition has never been aroused by reason of an early resignation to domestic life, will hear with sluggish blood the music of the guns, or by reason of lack of it experience be rendered valueless.

Recently a man-of-war was ordered unexpectedly to winter in an icebound and isolated port, where mail facilities were of a meager nature. The number of married officers who suddenly became ill and unfit for duty was astonishing. Their ship was turned to ridicule, and her efficiency must have been impaired by their departure. An officer should by law be made to remain a bachelor until such a time as will insure his considering properly the significant question, "Will this woman do me honor?" and if his reason tells him yes, then will he know that she will do honor as a representative of his country-women in foreign and perhaps rarely visited lands.

In the Italian service an officer cannot marry unless either the lady or himself possess sufficient fortune to keep up the dignity of his position.

When an officer of the French navy wishes to marry, it is necessary to ask permission of the Minister of Marine, and at the same time to state that the lady possesses a fortune of at least 25,000 francs. This official then satisfies himself that the statement is correct by communicating with the civil functionary, who is familiar with the financial condition of her family, and this information has to appear in writing at the time of the civil marriage.

In the Russian navy an officer cannot marry under the rank of Sub-Lieutenant, nor under the age of 23 years. If he marries before he is 25 he must show that he possesses a capital of 5,000 rubles.

Up to the grade of Captain-Lieutenant in the German service an officer must have a capital of 12,000 thalers before he can marry, and must also show certificates as to the respectability of his fiancee, and also of his own moral character.

Happily, it is not an American custom to make a business matter out of so sacred a contract as matrimony, so that we could not, were we so inclined, propose so indelicate a step as the regulation of marriage in the navy by the wealth of the contracting parties; but we can, nevertheless, see the evil working of a system that allows a boy to be entrapped in some unfortunate hour into chains that are to be hung around his neck as long as he lives, unless a sympathetic and discriminative Providence sees fit to rid him of his incumbrance.

A Lieutenant in the navy has, in his pay, the equivalent of $60,000 in Government bonds. With so much more from his wife, he can maintain a social status commensurate with his position under the Government; which is one of high trust and confidence. We can, however, readily dispense with the question of fortune if we can secure legislation that will result in the establishment of regulations forbidding officers to marry until they are lieutenants, or 30 years of age.

By that time they will have seen something of the world, and be able to judge wisely of the gravity of the step. The service will not then be hampered by young officers whose duty it is to go to sea and learn their profession, but whose lofty ambition seems to be to remain on shore and coddle their babies. Service feeling will receive a new impetus. The young and aspiring, bound by no stronger ties than are born of the idle flirtation of an hour, will give their fine abilities and splendid energies to the profession they have chosen, and whose glory will become their own.—United Service.

Incredulous.

The Yankee who told a boasting Englishman that "the whole of his old island could be put inside of Mammoth Cave," humorously exaggerated his facts. Yet true statements, as to the size of our territory, excite in ignorant foreigners as great incredulity as the most exaggerated lies. Lucy Hamilton Hooper writes from Paris to the Cincinnati Enquirer:

It is really amusing to find how little is known of the United States in France. A colonel in the French army once asked me, with a police peroration respecting the vast size of my native land, if the United States were not twice as large as France.

"We have one State," I answered, "that is as large as France"—I meant Texas—"and there are forty States in the Union."

The old gentleman looked at me with an expression that said, as plainly as words could have done,—

"This woman is lying to me most abominably, but I will be polite to her and not let her see that I know she is lying." So he made some vaguely civil remark, and changed the conversation.

Yet this intelligent military man prided himself on having crossed the Atlantic and visited the United States—that is to say, New Orleans.

The liquid used by tinsmiths and other workmen to cause soft solder to adhere to copper, brass and even iron, about which some maintain a secrecy, is merely a crude chloride of zinc. To make it, put a little muriatic acid into a wide-mouthed bottle of twice the capacity. Set this out of doors, on account of the odor, and add zinc cut in strips, so long as any is dissolved. In soldering copper, brass or iron, scrape the spot bright, place upon it a drop or two of this liquid, and apply solder in the usual manner.

Aid for the Complexion.

American ladies will prick up their ears at the information that Serkys is a plant much in use among the woman of Eastern Europe in order to enhance and retain their charms. Its properties have been known to Turkish women ever since the introduction of coffee into Europe. It is said to be a little herb which grows at the foot of the mountains of Lebanon. A spoonful of it in a breakfast cupful of boiling water forms a delicious infusion, which may be drank with milk and sugar, like ordinary tea, but is far more pleasant to the taste. Its great recommendation, to the fair sex, is that it has the virtue of retarding the ravages of age on all those who drink it daily. Dr. Paul Lucas, physician to Louis XIV., mentions it in his travels. He relates that, having been to attend the widow of Hassan Pasha, he was surprised to see her waited upon by two young women, of apparently 25 or 30 years of age, whereas he knew that it was customary for her to be waited upon by old women only. On expressing his surprise, he was told that both those young ladies were over sixty years of age, and that they owed their youthful appearance to the abundance of Serkys tea which they drank. Dr. Lucas immediately asked for some of this plant, and took it with him to France. It is supposed that he made a present of it to Ninon de l'Enclos, and that it was the mysterious secret of her extraordinarily youthful appearance when old. There is a great run on this article in Paris just now, for the doctors have discovered that it purifies the blood, and thus preserves the skin fair and transparent as in early youth. It also makes the flesh firm, and is particularly conducive to a full bust. About three years ago it was reintroduced into Paris by a French doctor who had traveled in the East. In Turkey, where it costs but little, it is often mixed with the water of the bath. Taken, however, in the same manner as tea, twice a day, its effects are said to be certain. It costs five francs an ounce, but a thimbleful is enough for a breakfast-cupful of the infusion.

Michigan's Mineral Wealth.

Michigan is rapidly coming to the front as a metal producing State. Its copper mines probably now rival those of Chili and their output during the past year is said to be in excess of any of the other copper districts of the world. The yield of all the copper mines in 1881 is placed at about 34,000 tons of mineral, possessing a value of about $10,000,000. In this connection, it is worthy of remark that all of the Lake Superior copper is not an ore, but a pure metal, which is ready for the market as soon as it is taken from the mine. This copper is especially noted for its tenacity, and, for uses where this quality is particularly desirable, it commands a high price. As an iron-yielding State, Michigan has ranked for several years as second only to Pennsylvania in the quality of its ore, while being first in the value of its product. It is now thought, however, that last year this State was in reality the largest ore producing commonwealth in the country. The product of its mines in that year was a total of 2,321,315 tons, while in 1880 the out-put of the Pennsylvania mines was but 2,185,675 tons of ore. The mining papers of this State are now rejoicing over the fact that the mines of Michigan have already produced over 330,000 tons of ingot copper, and over 17,000,000 tons of ingot iron ore, representing a value of over $275,000,000, and that the net earnings of these mines in 1881 exceeded those of all the gold, silver, lead and other metal mines in the United States combined. Certainly, the mineral wealth of the two States of Michigan and Pennsylvania, added to the undeveloped mineral resources, which are doubtless contained elsewhere in our broad expanse of territory, is a promise of prosperity such as nothing else could furnish.—Industrial World.

A Boston Girl's Whim.

For the past seven months there has been living with the Omahas, thirty miles below this city, and educated young lady—a Boston lady, too—who is for the time a member of the tribe, because she hopes in this way to learn something of the inner life of this, the oldest tribe, excepting the Pawnees, in this part of the West. This lady, Miss A. C. Fletcher, was in the city on Tuesday with Dr. Wilkinson, agent of the Omahas and Winnebagos. The agent says that on taking charge of the Omahas a few weeks ago he found this lady with them, and nearly starved. Miss Fletcher is a brunette, solidly built, about 25 years old, rather goodlooking, and with a directness of speech and a way of standing silent while irrelevant conversation is going on that probably comes of her present mode of her life. Miss Fletcher intimated to Dr. Wilkinson that before coming to the Omahas she had been with some of the warlike northern tribes, and from her present place of study she would go to the New Mexico Pueblos, thence to the Flatheads of Washington Territory, and return East by the way of the Sioux country.—Sioux City Journal.

Napoleon in Italy.

Nothing could be more unlike the idea my imagination had formed of him. In the midst of a numerous staff I saw a man below the middle height and of an extremely spare figure. His powdered hair, oddly cut, and falling squarely below the ears, reached down to his shoulders. He was dressed in a straight coat, buttoned up to the chin, and edged with very narrow gold embroidery, and he wore a tricolored feather in his hat. At first sight he did not strike me as handsome; but his strongly marked features, his quick and piercing eyes, his brusque and animated gestures, revealed an ardent spirit, while his wide and thoughtful brow was that of a profound thinker. He made me sit near him, and we talked of Italy. He spoke in short sentences, and, at that time of his life, very incorrectly.—Memoirs of Count Miot de Melito.

Courtesy at Home.

Good breeding, like charity, should begin at home. The days are past when children used to rise the moment their parents entered the room where they were and stand until they had received permission to sit. But the mistake is now made usually in the other direction of allowing to small boys and girls too much license to disturb the peace of the household. I think the best way to train children in courtesy would be to observe toward them a scrupulous politeness. I would go so far as to say that we should make it as much a point to listen to children without interrupting them and to answer them sincerely and respectfully as if they were grown up. And indeed many of their wise, quaint sayings are far better worth listening to than the stereotyped commonplaces of most morning callers. Of course to allow uninterrupted chatter would be to surrender the repose of the household, but it is very easy if children are themselves scrupulously respected to teach them in turn scrupulously to respect the convenience of others, and to know when to talk and when to be silent.

If a child is brought up in the constant exercise of courtesy toward brothers and sisters and playmates, as well as toward parents and uncles and aunts, it will have little left to learn as it grows older. I know a bright and bewitching little girl who was well instructed in table etiquette, but who forgot her lessons sometimes as even older people do now and then. The arrangement was made with her that for every solecism of this sort she was to pay a fine of five cents, while for every similar carelessness which she could discover in her elders she was to exact a fine of ten cents, their experience of life being longer than hers. You may be sure that Mistress Bright Eyes watched the proceedings of that table very carefully. No slightest disregard of the most conventional etiquette escaped her quick vision, and she was an inflexible creditor and a faithful debtor. It was the prettiest sight to see her, when conscious of some failure on her own part, go unhesitatingly to her money-box and pay cheerfully her little tribute to the outraged proprieties.—Louise Chandler Moulton in Our Continent.

The Strength of Plain Statement.

The first valuable power in a reasonable mind, one would say, is the power of plain statement, or the power to receive things as they befall, and to transfer the picture of them to another mind unaltered. 'Tis a good rule of rhetoric which Schlegel gives: "In good prose every word is underscored," which, I suppose, means never italicize.

Spartans, stoics, heroes, saints and gods use a short and positive speech. They are never off their centers. As soon as they swell and paint and find truth not enough for them, softening of the brain has already begun.

It seems as if inflation were a disease incident to too much use of words, and the remedy lay in recourse to things. I am daily struck with the forcible understatement of people who have no literary habit. The low expression is strong and agreeable. The citizen dwells in delusions. His dress and draperies, house and stables, occupy him. The poor countryman having no circumstances of carpets, coaches, dinners, wine and dancing in his head to confuse him, is able to look straight at you, without refraction or prismatic glories, and he sees whether you see straight also, or whether your head is addled by this mixture of wine.

The common people diminish: "a cold snap;" "it rains easy;" "good haying weather." When a farmer means to tell you that he is doing well with his farm, he says: "I don't work as hard as I did, and don't mean to." When he wishes to condemn any treatment of soils or of stock, he says: "It won't do any good." Under the Catskill Mountains the boy in the steamboat said: "Come up here, Tony; it looks pretty out-of-doors."—R. W. Emerson in the Century.

A White Elephant.

The whole of Siam was recently excited over the capture of a white elephant, and his transportation to Bangkok, the capital city. The Siam Weekly Advertiser has the following in regard to the affair:

"The great event of the week to the native community has been the demonstrations the King of Siam has made in consequence of his coming into possession of a white elephant. The transmigration theory of Buddhism grades the meritorious standing of all beings possessed of life. The elephant, and especially a cream flesh colored elephant, is a being of very good meritorious standing, and a human sovereign who becomes the possessor of so eminent an acquisition, must himself likewise possess an extraordinary amount of merit. The man who found this exceptional animal of an unnatural color has been handsomely rewarded and promoted. Much ceremony has attended the bringing of the animal to Bangkok, and the location of a home for it near the royal palace. Rewards and promotion have been conferred upon those who were the immediate means of placing the king in possession. The much feted animal has been titled, and has had appropriated for its use utensils that denote high rank. A stately place has been assigned as its future home, and a set of attendants are charged with the duty of waiting upon and doing the needful for it. The only fear now is that the unnatural animal may be killed by the unnatural attentions it will receive."

Reliable Seed-Corn.

A scarcity of good seed-corn is reported in papers published in nearly all parts of the country. The crop raised last season was light, and much that was harvested was not mature. The shortness of the crop in many places, last year, was occasioned in part by poor seed. The amount of good seed in the country is smaller than it was last year. Still, good corn was raised in some sections, and farmers who have a prime article should advertise it for seed. No farmer should take his chances on seed that he thinks may prove to be poor. It is better to pay $5 per bushel for seed that is known to be good than to plant that which is of doubtful character. Farmers who live in sections where there is no good corn on hand would do well to club together and obtain a supply from some locality where prime seed may be had. It would be well to get samples in advance and to test the vitality of the seed before sending a large order. A pretty good estimate of its value may be gained from outward appearances. The covering of the kernels should be smooth and bright, the portion that enters the cob uncolored, and the germ or "chit" prominent. It is best, however, to test its vitality by placing kernels taken from several cobs between layers of cotton batting, moistening them with tepid water and keeping them in a tolerably warm place. If the seed is good, sprouts will appear in a few days. It is not necessary that corn be of last year's growth in order to be good. Corn, if well ripened, properly cured, and preserved in a dry place, will grow if it is several years old, though it will be longer in germinating. It is best to procure seed-corn from some place near the latitude where it is to be planted.

The Judge's Philosophy.

A certain Circuit Judge was always sure of meeting some cutting or sneering remark from a self-conceited lawyer when he came to a certain town in his rounds. This was repeated one day at dinner, when a gentleman present said: "Judge, why don't you squelch that fellow?" The Judge, dropping his knife and fork and placing his chin upon his hands and his elbows on the table remarked: "Up in our town a widow woman has a yaller dog that, whenever the moon shines, goes out upon the stoop and barks and barks away at it all night." Stopping short, he quietly resumed eating. After waiting some time it was asked: "Well, Judge, what of the dog and the moon?" "Oh, the moon kept right on," he said.

Judging from the penman—no, womanship—it is some female who writes to us, and asks: "Which is the best way to serve potato bugs?" Being somewhat modest, we consulted the old potentate Ptolemy, and after very much tuberous reflection, and many wakeful nights, and scientific experiments, and potential reasoning, we give it as our entire conviction, that the best way to serve potato bugs is stuffed with sage and onions, baked with butter, placed upon toast, and garnished with olives and parsley. This is a Color-ado recipe, and all who use it will be certain to relie upon it.

Ashburnham, Mass. Jan. 14, 1880.

I have been sick over two years.—They all gave me up as past cure. I tried the most skilful physicians, but they did not reach the worst part.—The lungs and heart would fill up every night and distress me, and my throat was very bad. I told my children I should never die in peace until I had tried Hop Bitters. I have taken two bottles. They have helped me very much indeed. I am now well.—There was a lot of sick folks here who have seen how they helped me, and they used them and are cured, and feel as thankful as I do that there is so valuable a medicine made.

Grace Greenwood writes: "Never unsex yourself for greatness. The worship of one true heart is better than the wonder of the world. Don't trample on the flowers while longing for the stars. Live up to the full measure of life; give way to your impulses, loves and enthusiasms; sing, smile, labor and be happy. Adore poetry for its sake; yearn for and strive after excellence; rejoice when others attain it; feel for your cotemporaries a loving envy; steal into your country's heart; glory in its greatness, exult in its power, honor its gallant men, immortalize its matchless women."

I caught a severe cold, and remembering you told me to use "Downs' Elixir," I bought a bottle and in less than three days my cough and sore throat had vanished. It's good.

Kellogg's Columbian Oil has proved beyond a doubt that it is a safe and reliable remedy, and will cure all aches and pains incident to humanity. Our bodies need strengthening and repairing as much as the house we live in. Old persons are more subject than others to diseases of the kidneys and urinary organs, and the soothing, curative and healing properties of Columbian Oil in extreme cases seem almost incredible.

A moth-proof paper is made from a mixture of woolen, cotton, and hempen waste; it is then saturated with a mixture of crude carbolic acid, heated thin coal tar, and the residual oil from the rectification of naptha. The paper is then pressed and dried, and serves to wrap up articles liable to be damaged by moths.

ARTHURS' HOME MAGAZINE.

A NEW YEAR —WITH— New and Increased Attractions!

The Home Magazine occupies, and has always occupied a field especially its own. While gathering for its pages from the whole range of general literature, the editor and his efficient co-laborers exercise the most careful discrimination in regard to quality and influence. Nothing is admitted which, in their view, can give false ideas of life, or weaken the bonds of virtue. No matter what may be the reputation, nor how brilliant the talents of the writer, if his moral teachings are at all questionable, they can not find a place in our magazine.—And beyond this, its publishers claim that in its peculiar character and varied departments it is more thoroughly identified with the people in their every-day life and home and social interests than any other first-class periodical.

The Home Magazine for 1882 will be the most interesting and attractive that has yet appeared.

WHAT OUR SUBSCRIBERS SAY.

The floods in the lower Mississippi valley are the most disastrous that have been known in many years. Over thirty counties in Arkansas, Mississippi and Louisiana are wholly or partially submerged. Over fifty thousand people in these counties have lost all their property and been driven from their houses, and are so destitute that they will have to be fed at government expense for at least one month and perhaps two months to come. The effects of the flood must certainly be disastrous upon the next cotton crop. The crop in these thirty counties is on the average greater than in any other thirty counties of the entire south. The cotton picking season comes on early in July. Hence only four months from April 1st remain in which to repair damages and plant and cultivate to maturity a crop of cotton. The cotton yield in these thirty counties will be so greatly diminished, as to effect the entire season's crop.

Shall Chicago turnpike be graveled through Tecumseh township? This is the question now agitating the public. We were talking with a farmer who lives on the town line between Ridgeway and Tecumseh, on the subject and found him strongly in favor of it. Another farmer in Franklin says: "Go ahead. Gravel the turnpike to the Franklin town line and we will carry the road to the center." A vigorous canvass would probably secure enough donations in team work to draw the gravel, leaving only the grading and the gravel itself to be paid for. A movement is on foot in Ridgeway to gravel the pike from Ridgeway village to Britton station, and also from Britton north to the ridge road. Both of these projects will undoubtedly be entered upon and completed this spring. If Tecumseh takes hold of this matter promptly, an arrangement can undoubtedly be made to gravel the mile and a quarter between Ridgeway village and the town line, and thus give us a good gravel road from here to Britton.

THE NEW DISTRICTS.

MORMONISM.

Synopsis of a Sermon Preached by Rev. R. S. Pardington, Pastor of M. E. Church Tecumseh, Feb. 26, 1882, and Published by Request of Hearers.

A sect was founded in 1830 in this country by Joseph Smith and they bear the name Mormons. They call themselves "The church of the latter day saints," because their dispensation is the last given to man in his present existence. One of the gravest problems to-day confronting this nation is the antagonism of this sect to the government and christian civilization. 200,000 Mormons in Utah and the adjoining states and territories are bound by oaths which make them at once the vassals of their leaders and the pronounced enemies of the government under which they dwell. This sect really constitutes a heirarchy with an annual income of $5,000,000, which money is freely used for political purposes until to-day they have no mean power at Washington. They hate the republic, they despise the flag. When they emigrated from Illinois to Utah, it was their plan to put 1000 miles between them and the civilized world. I give you their liberty hymn composed for the occasion.

"We'll cast off all fetters and break the reptile yoke,
For long it has beset us, but now it shall be broke:
No more shall Jacob bow his neck.
Henceforth he shall be great and free in upper California,
Oh, that's the land for me, oh, that's the land for me."

On their arrival they began agriculture. Cheerfulness, intelligence and zeal were manifest in all hands. One has said, "Swifter, more active, more glad hearted colonists have never been seen." Brigham Young arrived there in 1847, and the main body in the autumn of 1848. Salt Lake City was decided on. Public buildings were erected. A place of worship put up, manufactories and shops were started. An emigration fund was begun, settlers poured in from Europe and from all parts of this land. In 1849 a convention was held, a state organized under the name of Deseret, understood by the Mormons to mean "the land of the honey bee." A legislature was elected, a constitution formed and representatives were sent to Washington. Congress refused to recognize this new state, but in September following organized the territory of Utah, of which Brigham Young was appointed governor by President Filmore. District judges were appointed by the Federal government, but were so rudely treated that they were finally compelled to leave the territory in 1851. The "saints" defied the government and subverted the laws of the United States. Polygamy had not yet been promulgated. Brigham Young was emboldened and felt that now he could announce any idea and not be interfered with by the government. The authorities at Washington, while having no intention to interfere with their extravagant religious notions, yet they felt outraged by the expulsion of the officers from the territory. In 1854, a U. S. colonel arrived at Salt Lake City to succeed Young as governor. He found it so uncomfortable and met with so much opposition that after the winter was over, he with his troops moved on to California without assuming authority. Immediately after, Brigham Young in a sermon in the tabernacle declared "I am and will be governor and no power can hinder me until the Lord Almighty says, 'Brigham, you need not be governor any longer.'" This is the animus of the leaders. Mormonism is an open systematic defiance of the national government. Let us inquire, "Who are its peoples?" Bishop Wiley of the M. E. church who has been on the ground several times, and has studied this question, says: "The sect does not grow by accessions from among our American people, but by its own children and the steady tide of immigration." They have about 300 missionaries in the field. They lead to Utah between 2000 and 3000 annually. The N. Y. Herald in a recent editorial seeks to correct some popular delusions about Utah. One delusion is that the Mormons chiefly consist of foreigners. The very opposite is true. The American born outnumber the foreigh by 2 to 1. The census of 1880 give American born 99,969, foreign birth 43,994. Dacotah, which approximates Utah in numbers is much more largely settled by foreigners than Utah. Let not the people then shift the responsibility of this degraded, and degrading and traitorous and murderous system of Utah upon foreigners. Mormonism was born in an American brain, having first been conceived in his depraved heart, the heart of a revelation forger. Its leaders have always been largely of American extraction. Joseph Smith, the founder, was a Vermonter. Brigham Young and Heber C. Kimball, who had control of the people when polygamy was inaugurated and grafted into the system, were also natives of Vermont. John Taylor, the present head of the church, though an Englishman by birth, yet has lived now 50 years in America. Nearly all associated with him in power are Americans. When President Filmore appointed Brigham Young territorial governor, polygamy had not yet been announced as a revelation from God. Congress has had the power to control these people in all things which are subject to regulation by law. The Herald has well said: "These figures fix the absolute responsibility on the U. S. government for what Utah is. As the twig is bent the tree is inclined, and if Congress had bent the twig out of its crookedness while the wood was tender and supple, it might have spared itself the present severe effort to straighten out a stout trunk of more than 30 years growth." Another popular delusion is that the recruits for Mormonism are among those European races which are inferior to the so called Anglo-Saxon stock. Look at the facts. England makes the largest contributions to it, and next to England is Scandinavia, these people who are nearest the Anglo-Saxons. There are a few Germans and they are attracted by the mining interests. Italians, Frenchman and Spaniards are rarely found there. In 1880 there were 19,654 persons in Utah born in England, and only 885 of German birth. Another thing worthy of note is that there are 51,471 males to 69,436 females by the census of 1880. With many mormons, polygamy is a luxury and from economic motives many of them are monogamists. The numerous wives of the leader must not be considered as the rule. These leaders are no better than the Turks who keep seraglios, and on the same principle. What are some of the salient features of the Mormon religion?

The history of the word teaches us that men fashion God after their own ideals. If the age was an intellectual one, then God was a being of thought. But let me state a general and indisputable proposition. The religion of people has always been shaped by their conceptions of God. Now for their religious tenets. You will not find them in the book of Mormons to differ very much from the views of ordinary creeds. They believe that a continuous revelation abides in the church. This accounts for the promulgation of polygamy and other vices which appear not in any of the writings of Joseph Smith. We must look now for their views in the different lectures and sermons which are extant and largely in a book, known among them as "The Pearl of Great Price." They claim that their religious system is a revival of the primitive religion revealed to Adam. They believe in God the eternal father and in His Son, Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost. But their conceptions of God are ridiculous. They believe that God was once a man, who was, however so advanced in intelligence and power that He may be called perfect, infinite, but that He has still the form and figure of a man. Orson Pratt said he has legs, with this advantage over man, he can fly up and down in the air without using them. Again He eats, He drinks, He loves and hates. This soon led into polytheism, so that they believe there are Gods innumerable. Brigham Young said: "Adam is the God of Jesus Christ, Jesus Christ the God of Joseph Smith, Joseph the God of this generation, and now Smith is dead, I, Brigham Young am the God of this generation."

Here is a specimen of the manner in which he approached the enunciation of polygamy. When our father, Adam came into the garden of Eden, he brought Eve, one of his wives with him. Mormonism, to-day, if we judge by its teachings, is rapidly developing into Pantheism. Let me give you one or two illustrations. "There is no substance in the universe which thinks and feels but what has eternally possessed that capacity. When we speak of God we refer to Truth dwelling in a vast variety of substances, each individual of the vegetable and animal kingdoms contains a living spirit possessed of intelligent capacities." They believe that things in the life to come are continued as now. Dying is not taking "a leap into the dark." The future residence of a saint is not an ideal thing. Each Mormon will have in the future, 150 acres of land, houses, flower gardens, all things of a necessity and luxury, wives and children included. "A man's wife will be restored to him as a wife and will bear children from his loins in all worlds to come."

Brigham Young said that God revealed polygamy to Joseph Smith, but that Smith never made it known only to him. Smith's widow denied it, saying Smith never had any revelation about it. But a polygamist can lie and so Young stated that while he was in England in 1839-40 that God revealed it to him, and so he taught it and set the glaring example. Bishop Wiley says: "The polygamy of Mormonism is the worst form that ever cursed the world. Barbarous nations only permitted it. Mormonism commands it." Among the "Saints" it is an element in their present and and eternal welfare. Polygamy with them preserves no right to the first wife. She is displaced and the crown goes upon the head of a sweeter and newer bride.

Rev. Dr. Barrows of Chicago says: "I know a man in Salt Lake City, 40 years of age, who has 5 wives and 36 children, and lives on a salary of $1200 a year. What must be the hidden life of this man's family." Mr. Bowles repeats the words of a woman uttered in his presence: "Polygamy is intolerable enough for the men, but it is hell for the women." The women are under a fearful bondage. The power of the priesthood transcends that of the Papacy. Brigham Young said to the women who were complaining some: "If you do not stop your everlasting whining and obey God's order, I will bring the curse of God upon you and send you out into eternity husbandless. If you trifle with the priesthood, you trifle with God and you forfeit your salvation, and the priesthood have the right to dictate to you women even in the setting up of your stocking and as to the shape of the heel and length of the toe." Rebellion means death. The "black list" is a terrible list among the mormons.

With Mormonism as a religious system, our government cannot and must not deal, except where that system comes in conflict with the vital principles and institutions of the government itself. That the system is in conflict with the government there is no doubt. Feb. 19, 1882, one of the Eiders in a sermon in the Tabernacle denounced the proposed legislation in congress. Another called upon the saints to resist by armed rebellion, declaring that he would shoot a U. S. soldier as quick as he would a dog. The government must protect its laws and institutions in Utah as in Michigan. It must be made as odious and as antagonistic to law for a man to have a plurality of wives in Salt Lake City as in Tecumseh. We trust that congress will pass the present anti-polygamy bill, then we believe the miserable leaders will give up the fight. They will disintegrate, and 1000 will arise and support the government. These egotistical, bombastic, criminal, rebellious, rotten leaders must be subdued. They aim to spread polygamy as the slaveholders of the past did slavery. They propose to take this nation if they can. Brigham Young once said: "If the government does not let me alone, I will become a second Mahomet to this generation, and will make it one gore of blood from the Rocky Mountains to the Atlantic ocean."

This reveals the animus of the leaders of this sect. While we do not tremble beneath these threats, yet it is time the government arose in the fullness of its power and clean out the rebellion in these fellows. The Augean stables of Utah must be purified. Civil war is to be dreaded even in a limited district. It is the possible glory of this Republic to suppress this evil by the wise application of judicious, yet firm law, and so giving the sect no chance to cry "martyrdom."

I believe that an unparalelled prosperity awaits the coming states of the Rocky Mountain plateau. Salt Lake City will be the great city between Denver and San Francisco. The mining interests are opening wonderfully. Let us go forth and plant our schools and churches in that section. Let us sow the seed of a Godly civilization. The young Mormons are opposed to polygamy, and from this religious system all vitality has departed. Education of the young is the demand of the hour. Education will solve this grave problem. Agitate perennially; persistently, powerfully agitate. Let preachers cry aloud, let editors write, let the people petition congress. Washington ought to be in a state of seige by the people. Our faith in the future of God's plans in this Republic leads us to believe that He will yet make of this remarkable people a God fearing people. Let the churches organize and seek the coming of this event. May the Master's whip of small cords be used to drive out this diabolic system. God shall glorify the people that help to bring this about as the people who saved the Republic, and so shall the land be ready for the sure coming of the time when there shall be 200 inhabitants to the square mile.

THE WALTER A. WOOD HARVESTING MACHINES
Take the Lead.

In 1853, 500 Machines were sold.
In 1881, 40,413 were sold, and
47,000 have been ordered for 1882.

But the NE PLUS ULTRA of Harvesting Machinery is the Wood Twine Binder. This machine was first put upon the market in 1880, and 4,184 machines were sold that year. In 1881, the sales swelled to 10,034, and orders for over 12,000 have already been received for 1882.

THE WOOD TWINE BINDER!

Possesses these special points of excellence:

1—It is the most perfect automatic self binder ever made.
2—It effects a positive separation of the bound from the unbound grain.
3—The sheaf is formed and compressed without any strain on the twine until the knot is tied.
4—The grain is straightened by the action of the packer as it enters the binder.
5—The automatic uniform sizing of the bundle, thus relieving the driver of the care of stopping and starting the binder.

Last year's machines proved such a perfect success that they will be built substantially the same for 1882, with such improvements in minor details as may be found necessary.

Every farmer desiring to buy a self binder should examine the Wood Twine Binder before purchasing.

Every Machine Sold is WARRANTED!

THE missionery conference held at the Baptist church last Monday and Tuesday was quite largely attended, and the meetings were very interesting. Mission work constituted the leading feature of the program, although other departments of church work received some attention. Want of space prevents our giving a detailed report of the meetings.

PUBLIC oral examinations in the Tecumseh public schools will be held during the last week in March. Oral examinations in the Central Building March 28th and 29th; in all other departments March 30th and 31st. All interested are cordially invited to attend one and all examinations. W. C. FITZSIMMONS has resigned his position as colonel of the first regiment. The resignation has been accepted by general order No. 9 issued by Adj. Gen. Robertson, on the 10th inst. It is said that a movement is on foot to elect Adj. Willis Merritt to succeed Fitzsimmons as colonel of the First. We doubt whether a better man could be found for the place.—Adj. Merritt is well posted in tactics, enjoys an extended acquaintance and would make a good colonel.

A LARGE class of teachers was present at the examination held in Tecumseh last Saturday. The examination was cut short by the examiners leaving on the 4 o'clock train.

If so, a petition to that effect signed by twelve free holders must be filed with the township clerk at least twelve days before election, and a special vote must be taken thereon at the coming town meeting.

Opera House Adrian.

On Friday eve., March 24, the celebrated and original Vokes Family will appear, and present two of their great specialties. Their own and original Belles of the Kitchen, and the comedy, Cousin Joe. The Vokes came to this country some ten years ago and originated that light class of musical entertainment made so popular by themselves, The Troubadors, Fun on the Bristol, and Edwins Dreams, but they are the best in their line. Seats will be on sale at Humphrey's book store, Adrian, Tuesday, the 21st, and can be secured by letter or telegraph.

TEACHERS' INSTITUTE.

The State Teachers' Institute for Lenawee county, will be held at Adrian, commencing at 2 o'clock, P. M., Monday, March 27, and closing Friday following. Prof. E. G. Walker, Adrian, local committee.

It is desired to make the Institutes of this series of the greatest practical benefit to teachers. For this purpose some of the most experienced and successful instructors have been engaged to conduct the various exercises. With revised outlines of institute work as a guide, and with the experience of the past to aid us, it is believed that the present series will be of unusual value to all.

Under the operations of the new school law better preparation and greater efficiency are demanded of teachers, and in view of this fact, all persons that intend to engage in teaching will find it greatly to their interest to be present at all the sessions of the institute to prepare for the increased requirements.

The morning and afternoon sessions will be devoted to the discussion of topics of particular interest to teachers, while the evening lectures will be of a popular character.

There will be no tuition or enrollment fee. Full particulars in regard to board, etc., may be obtained upon application to the local committee.

FARMERS' CLUB.

Club met at J. W. Gillespie's Friday, March 3d., with a good attendance. The program was carried out in full.

Anna Everhart read an excellent essay upon "Building Castles in the Air." She would not condemn castle building, as many of life's realest pleasures consisted in building air castles.

Question—Is a vegetable garden a profitable investment for farmers.—Mr. Schreder opened the discussion. He thought it could be made profitable. He was much troubled with angle-worms in his garden, and wished for a remedy.

Mrs. J. Rector suggested that he go fishing pretty often; as they were not troubled with worms, but John would like to have some imported into his garden.

Mr. R. R. Hall could say with certainty that a vegetable garden was profitable, as since he had paid attention to one he had saved fifty dollars in one year in groceries.

D. M. Ferry's seeds were condemned by most of the members.

Mr. Horton recommended Gregory's seeds of Marblehead, Mass., and he was requested to send for seeds for the club.

The next meeting being the last for the season it was decided not to have a discussion but an oyster supper.

There will be a short program first as follows:

Inst. Music—Miss Fred Griswold.
Rec.—Kittie Griswold.
Singing.
Select Reading—A. G. Hall.
Instrumental Music.
Dec.—Garland Gillespie.
Essay—Mrs. F. C. Rector.

MRS. F. C. RECTOR, Secretary.

CHINA WEDDING.

Last Monday evening Mr. and Mrs. S. L. Shutt celebrated the twentieth anniversary of their marriage. Quite a number of invitations were issued, and at an early hour guests began to assemble, till at nine o'clock their home was crowded with many people, both young and old, to congratulate them upon their twenty years of married life and happiness. The evening, to all present, was a pleasant one. Suitable remarks were made by several persons present. The presents were numerous, and the refreshments were served as only Mrs. Shutt knows how to serve them. The gifts were formally presented by Mr. W. R. Bresie, of St. Louis, Mo., in a few eloquent remarks. He spoke as follows:

In honor of this social event which has called together so many friends of this the celebration of the Twentieth Anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Shutt, a few words of congratulation may not be out of order to our genial host and hostess.

Your cards of invitation say twenty years. Twenty years! That measures a long time, when in the hey-dey of youth you looked forward into a future that appeared rich and bright with golden promises of success. Now you have reached the 20th mile post of your journey together; which considering the vicisitudes of life under the high pressure of modern civilization may be called a long voyage.—One-fifth of a century, and still in the vigor of youth. Through the joys and sorrows, clouds and storms of married life this is an experience which they only who have made the voyage can measure.

Your marriage has been blessed by the pledge of love, which the good book calls an olive branch—the emblem of peace: which is an evidence that your conjugal existence has been serene. I think we can look into your pleasant countenances, on this happy occasion, and feel assured that the next twenty years will pass as smoothly. This may be called the half-way stage of married life, and to have arrived at this point and have honored the married vows so well is best of evidence of merit to accomplish the rest. And this is a fitting occasion for renewing the wedding vows of fidelity to each other for the rest of the journey.

We do not presume to say your journey has or will be all sunshine. The wheels of matrimony may not have always run smoothly; there will be friction; and we believe you like the rest of us have had your share. We hope you may live to arrive at the golden wedding of fifty years, and we who have gathered with you to-night will then be, as well as you, in the sear and golden leaf of life. If not with you may we remember you. I wish you may be surrounded with other pledges of love, other olive branches of marital peace, or in plainer words my wish is, may your only trouble be children.

We, your guests, I think I may speak for all here assembled, wish for you continued and increasing happiness at every revolution of the wheel of time; we wish for you all the good there is. May the evening of your life be as happy and serene as your past has been honorable and useful; and when the wheel stops, as it will, may you be reunited and brightened where the changes of time will no longer effect you.

THE REMENYI TROUPE.

The Remenyi Concert Troupe will give an entertainment in the opera house on next Tuesday evening. The world renowned violinist, Remenyi, will be assisted by Miss Cassandra Nason, soprano, Mr. Chas. J. Ross, baritone, and Mr. H. W. Beale, pianist. The managers have incurred a heavy expense to procure Remenyi, and it is to be hoped that our people will return the compliment by giving them a rousing house. The train will be held after the concert to accommodate Clinton and Manchester people who may wish to attend. From the numerous press notices at hand we select a few.

Geo. P. Upton (Chicago Tribune).—He is the peer of any living player we have heard. He sweeps criticism and every sort of objection away. His technique is simply boundless and equal to any emergency. It is simply electrifying, strangely fascinating, and as majestic as was that of Rubinstein as compared with Von Bulow.

Staats Zeitung.—Bright and sparkling as champagne and fiery as tokay.

Geo. Armstrong (Inter Ocean).—One of those meteors which flash at intervals across the sky. As a player who can achieve the most astonishing technical effects, his like has never been heard here.

Hazard (N. Y. Tribune).—We do not believe he has a rival. In fire, brilliancy and daring he reminds us of the accounts that have been written of Paganini.

N. Y. Post.—The greatest player that has yet appeared in this country.

N. Y. Telegram.—One of the few in whom the sacred fire has been lighted and in whom it has reached the fullness of its blaze.

Alfred Quidaut (Paris Union).—I have heard Paganini, and think I hear him again. No living artist has carried farther than he the science of the violin. He draws from his instrument sounds which the human ear never heard.

Theodore Thomas.—Wilhelmj plays for the critics. Remenyi for both critics and the people.

London Times.—He is absolutely unsurpassable.

The Louisville Courier-Journal thus speaks of Remenyi: His personality is something marvelous, and he ingratiates himself without making advances. The genuine love of the mother for the child, the fondness of a hunter for his dog, the sentiment of the patriot toward his native land, when displayed, never fail to awaken in us a feeling of veneration. The care with which Remenyi regards his

No one can doubt for a moment that he loves that violin. He finds more music imprisoned in it than any violinist ever heard in this city. It is indeed an Aladdin's cave of harmony, and he is the only one who knows the magic words which open it to us. There is something very touching in the way he handles his instrument. At times he bows his head reverently, as if he were listening to the voice within it. An unusually soft movement will cause him to close his eyes, entranced by the phantom voices which speak to him. Then he will fairly ubble over with vim and sparkle, and the very smile which his movements evoke makes one like the man the more. So keenly does he sympathize with his music that he may almost be said to use gestures like the orator to enforce what he speaks. There can be no doubt that he is the greatest living violinist, and any music lover who does not hear him is remiss in his duty.

Never Give Up.

If you are suffering with low and depressed spirits, loss of appetite, general debility, disordered blood, weak constitution, headache, or any disease of a bilious nature, by all means procure a bottle of Electric Bitters. You will be surprised to see the rapid improvement that will follow; you will be inspired with new life; strength and activity will return; pain and misery will cease, and henceforth you will rejoice in the praise of Electric Bitters. Sold at fifty cents a bottle by all druggists.

THE last two lectures of the season's course will be given by Tank Kee, on Wednesday and Thursday evenings of next week, March 22 and 23. Subject: China and the Chinese. These lectures will not only be interesting but very instructive, as they will be given by a native Chinaman.

Agricultural Notes.

Stone, brick or wooden walls, with perpendicular air spaces in them, are warmer than solid walls, because the air conducts heat away less than the solid materials. A sheathing of tarred paper, or pasteboard, or of any thick paper even, placed midway between the clapboarding and the plastering, to form two thin air-chambers instead of one, adds greatly to the warmth of a house or other building. Two half-inch-boards, set a little apart to leave an air space between, makes a far warmer house wall than the same thickness of wood in inch boards.

The farmer should sign nothing, under any pretext whatever, for a stranger; do not even give your address—"just as a memorandum." When least expected, this address will turn up as a signature to some kind of a promise to pay. Avoid every easy way of making money. No matter by what name it is called, the scheme is likely to be fraudulent. Let every farmer, and others who live in the country, be sure that trees and shrubs with fruit of heretofore unheard of excellence, or flowers of unsurpassed beauty, are not introduced by hawkers and peddlers.

The making of manure is one of the most important labors of the Winter season, or perhaps it should have been said the saving of it. The value of a manure depends on several things, the leading of which are; the food given the animal; the kind, age and condition of the animal fed; and last, but not least, the care which the manure receives after it has been dropped. Rich manure can only be made from rich food; if straw alone is fed, the manure must be poor, as the animal adds nothing to, but, instead, extracts from, the store of plant-food in the fodder.

When house plants are in a growing state, they may be stimulated by the use of guano water. A small teaspoonful of Peruvian guano dissolved in a pailful of rain water is strong enough; water the soil with this once, or at most twice a week. The water of ammonia (hartshorn) is about as good, and can be had everywhere. If of ordinary strength, add a fourth of an ounce (two teaspoonfuls) to a gallon of water, and use as above stated. Cold coffee is also said by some florists to be nourishing to plants, and especially is it commended to force plants to bloom.

Mice are very prolific; a single pair will often multiply to fifty or more during a single season, as the earlier broods reproduce one or more generations. Usually a large proportion of each Summer's growth is killed off in Winter, if Autumn rains saturate the soil. At this writing, the ground is still dry, deep down, in several States. If at any point the soil freezes solid before copious rains, extra caution should be taken to protect fruit trees and shrubs against mice.

The fruit trees that are to be set the coming Spring should be selected now, and the orders sent to the nurserymen that they may fill them properly. "Tree peddlers" have a poor reputation for honesty, and should be left alone unless one is sure of the nursery that they represent. It is best to buy directly of reliable tree-growers and, other things being the same, as near home as possible. Should the trees be frozen when they arrive, place them in a cool place where they may thaw slowly.

If "worms" are very numerous in a meadow, the best thing that can be done is to turn them under with the plough as deeply as possible, and plant the ground in some crop that can be matured in the season, and that is applicable. If the meadow is new, and it is very desirable to preserve it for the next year, the farmer must then turn in hogs, etc., use the roller or adopt such device as may be most convenient, so as to make the injury as light as possible, but with no idea of saving the present crop.

It costs the farmer much more than it formerly did to carry on his farm, and the need of the hour is products, and prices commensurate with his increased expenses.

It is said that a piece of zinc, placed on the live coals, will effectually clean out a stove-pipe, the vapor thus produced carrying off the soot by chemical decomposition.

It is useless to deny that the brightest and fairest fall every victims to consumption, and equally fruitless to ignore the fact that decline has its origin in many cases in neglected catarrh. Sanford's Radical Cure is a pure, sweet balsamic specific.

Hypborisy at Public Dinners.

I once attended a dinner given to a great state functionary by functionaries—men of law, state and trade. The guest was a great man in his own country, and an honored diplomatist in this. His health was drunk with some acknowledgment of his distinguished services to both countries, and followed by nine cold hurrahs. There was the vicious superlative. Then the great official spoke and beat his breast, and declared that he should remember this honor to the latest moment of his existence. He was answered again by officials. Pity, thought I, they should lie so about their keen sensibility to the nine cold hurrahs and to the commonplace compliment of a dinner. Men of the world value truth, in proportion to their ability, not by its sacredness, but for its convenience. Of such, especially of diplomatists, one has a right to expect wit and ingenuity to avoid the lie, if they must comply with the form. Now, I had been present a little before in the country at a cattle-show dinner, which followed an agricultural discourse delivered by a farmer; the discourse, to say the truth, was bad; and one of our village fathers gave at the dinner this toast: "The orator of the day; his subject deserves the attention of every farmer." The caution of the toast did honor to our village father. I wish great lords and diplomatists had as much respect for truth.—Ralph Waldo Emerson, in the February Century.

Beauty Regained.

The beauty and color of the hair may be safely regained by using Parker's Hair Balsam, which is much admired for its perfume, cleanliness and dandruff eradicating properties.

Sweet Potatoes.

Not many years ago sweet potatoes were grown only in the south, and were luxuries not enjoyed in the country. Gradually their cultivation has continued north till they are now raised in Maine and Michigan. It is not possible to raise in the far northern states sweet potatoes having the excellence and long-keeping qualities of those produced in the south. Still very good specimens can be raised, and with very little trouble. Every farmer who cares for good living should raise enough for the use of his family during the late fall and early winter months. If anyone in the vicinity raises the plants for sale, it is generally cheaper to buy them than to take the trouble to raise them. Still they can be raised with very little trouble. A half peck of seed is sufficient to produce the plants required to raise a supply of potatoes for a common family. Those of small size are preferable to very large ones, and can be obtained at a nominal price. A very simple form of hot-bed will answer for starting the plants. An old box, without a bottom, four feet square and two feet high, will make a good frame, and no covering but one made of boards or mats will be required to keep out the cold and rain. A hole should be made in the ground about a foot deep, and the box set into it. Fresh horse manure, to which one-third part of forest leaves or fine straw has been mixed, should be placed in the bottom of the box to the depth of a foot or more. After it has been in position till the steam rises freely from it the manure should be covered six inches deep with clean sand or fine loam, and the potatoes placed in it so they will not touch each other and covered about one inch deep. The earth in the hot-bed must be watered from time to time, covered at night and during rains, and kept from becoming too hot.

Drunkenness in Cincinnati.

Col. John F. Hoy, a temperance lecturer of considerable repute, was asked by a reporter in Louisville, Ky.:

"In what portion of the United States does drunkenness prevail to the greatest extent?"

"The least amount of intoxicating liquor is consumed in the New England States. As you come West and South the habit increases. The worst city in the world is Cincinnati. There is more whisky and beer drunk there, and more of the evil, misery and crime resultant from the use of liquors, than in any place in which I have ever been, either in this country or Europe. That remark of a Boston paper was crucially correct. It was to the effect that though somebody had styled Cincinnati the 'Paris of America,' it was the 'Hell of the World.' If Harrison, the boy preacher, converts that town he'll perform a gigantic work."

"To what class of society does the appetite for drink cause the greatest havoc?"

"Among the laboring and poor classes. You see, the bar-rooms are their only places of resort, the only places where they can meet associates. The wealthy can purchase other pleasures, and are generally organized into circles for mutual amusement and recreation. Of course drinking exists among them as well as among the lowly, but its consequences are not nearly so fatal.

French Statesmen Waxing Rich.

It is a remarkable fact that whereas most English statesmen die neither richer nor poorer than when they took to politics, French statesmen almost invariably wax richer. Beginning with hardly anything, they gravitate into palaces and country houses and into the possessions of rents and other such property. If they do not speculate themselves, their wives do; if they have no wives, then some convenient friend does. I have often wondered that opposition journals in France do not insist upon knowing from what mysterious sources ministers derive their wealth. Their editors, I suppose, hope some day to become ministers themselves, and therefore do not like to introduce the public behind the scenes.

Mother Died of Salt Rheum.

J. W. Adams, Newark, Ohio, says: "Cuticura Remedies are the greatest medicines on earth. Had the worst case of Salt Rheum in this country. My mother had it twenty years, and in fact died from it. I believe Cuticura would have saved her life. My arms, breast and head were covered for three years, which nothing relieved or cured until I used the Cuticura Remedies.

The Best Antidote Against Infection.

It is terrible to read of infectious diseases with which we are still troubled. There are whole districts now trembling for fear that small pox will invade them or spread within them; towns are dreading the coming malarial fevers; others are already suffering under diphtheria, while scarlet fever, measles, etc., are not even mentioned.

We think that a certain class of antidotes have never become sufficiently appreciated in these cases. There is one especially which we would wish to mention, the fumes of boiling malt vinegar. They dispel infectious particles rapidly and kill their virulence, particularly if used in time. Where these fumes are used, windows and doors should be closed and not opened for about twenty minutes. After this time the fresh air can be freely admitted. When these fumes are used repeatedly, disease will assuredly be kept off. This is also an excellent preventive among cattle and sheep against infection, and even a curative in certain cases. The great power of acids to dispel and kill malarial particles is not sufficiently appreciated, and any one can make a trial in the simplest form by allowing the fumes of boiling vinegar to spread about.

You get an entire meal, as good as is served in any first-class hotel, for seventy-five cents.

Appreciating the fact that a majority of the people prefer separate apartments for different purposes (and the immense passenger business of this line warranting it), we are pleased to announce that this Company runs Pullman Palace Sleeping Cars for sleeping purposes, and Palace Dining Cars for eating purposes only. One other great feature of our Palace Cars is a SMOKING SALOON where you can enjoy your "Havana" at all hours of the day.

DR. A. TRASK'S MAGNETIC OINTMENT.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders
It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.
The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.
WHAT IT CURES.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the vital fluid, by this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every tissue, muscle, vein, nerve, and ligament is searched and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.
Over 40 Years
This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country we simply ask those readers of this notice who have never used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should feel perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

The Battle Creek Journal says that the general offices of the Grand Trunk road will be removed from Port Huron within the next fortnight. The recent thaw has about suspended lumber operations in Roscommon county, after a run of about six weeks good sleighing. Only about two-thirds of the estimated amount of the logs to be put in have reached the banking grounds. Millions of feet of logs that were skidded last fall remain on the skidways in the woods. So far as can be ascertained the amount of logs banked is about 125,000,000, with Nester and St. Helens to hear from.

Oakland county is infested with an organized band of horse thieves.—When they don't break into a man's barn and get the animal, they break into his credulity and attain the same result. The mode is something like this: A man opens a so-called sale stable in some large city, and another goes out into the country as agent.—He goes to the owner of a fine animal and says: "Mr. A., how much for that horse?" "Two hundred dollars."—"Tell you what I'll do," says the agent. "Mr. Jones has a sale stable in such a place, and has an order for just such a horse as yours. I'll take the animal in, sell him for considerable more than $200, and divide up all over the latter sum between us." The farmer bites, his property is sold, and the principal and agent pocket the proceeds.

A Perpetual Ice-Gorge.

Within an hour's drive from Philadelphia may be witnessed one of the strangest sights in this country—a perpetual ice-gorge. This gorge exists at the foot of the Blue Mountains, back of Swattswood Lake and Middleville, and is but a few miles west of Newton. It is several hundred yards in extent, from ten to thirty feet deep, with numerous caves and clefts in the rock where the ice lies. The main gorge is located but a short distance from the mountain, and the stream of water, which is very strong, has apparently never penetrating it. The entire bottom of the gorge is covered with thick, clear ice, and the crevices and caves are filled with it. That it is a natural ice-house there can be no doubt. Hundreds of tons of ice might be taken out without appreciably decreasing the quantity. Much of this great mass has doubtless lain there for years, the ice gradually melting on top and being added to each year. The thermometer, which during a "hot spell" registered one hundred and three degrees in Newtown, marked just thirty-eight degrees at the same time at the bottom of the gorge—too cold for a person to remain there any length of time. A few feet from one end of the gorge a spring of the most delicious, sparkling water bubbles up through the ice. It tastes slightly of iron, and is very satisfying to the thirst. This water stands at thirty-four degrees—about as cold as one could comfortably drink it.

Male Callers.

Do not call formally on a lady unless invited to do so; dress suitably for the occasion. Wear a full dress suit, light necktie—white ties are preferred by some gentlemen, but the fashion of "neck dress" is not so much in vogue as it was a few years ago. It has been adopted by waiters, and hence the death of the mode. It is necessary according to the dictates of fashion, that gentlemen callers should wear pumps or low-cut French shoes. The silk hose must match the tint of the tie or scarf unless this is white, and then the half-hose can be of any color you may please to fancy. The pocket-handkerchief should be white linen, or white linen with a very delicate border. When you call, etiquette requires you to limit your visits; do not remain longer than ten minutes unless requested to do so by the hostess. Leave your overcoat in the carriage, and should you go on foot, leave this garment in the hall; by no means go into the parlor with it on. Partake of some refreshments, no matter how much disinclined you feel to eat. You are permitted to refuse wine if you wish, for no lady will urge you to drink after you have refused. Do not remove your gloves (not even when you partake of refreshments); their hue should correspond with your tie and half-hose.

The Railroad Man and the Missionary.

Two young and aspiring railroad men, who were placed on the retired list owing to the consolidation of Gould's Southwestern roads, expressed themselves rather emphatically, and in language that shocked the feelings of a missionary who was sitting close by listening to their remarks. He stood it as long as he could, but finally he lost his patience and walked up to the two young railroad men and reprimanded them for using such profane language.

"You ought to know," he said in conclusion, "that there are but two roads, one leading to Hell and Damnation and the other to Joy and Salvation; now which one would you rather take?"

"Well," replied one of the railroad men, after getting over his surprise in being thus addressed, "I don't think I'll take either, for it is ten to one that the two roads will fall into the hands of Gould and be consolidated before I get there."

The missionary made no further efforts to convert the heathen, and left disgusted.

The Misrepresented Mole.

Who is there among dwellers in the country who has not seen dead moles hanging on sticks in the fields, or has not heard of farmers paying money for their capture? A correspondent, however, suggests that farmers may have been making a serious and cruel mistake. "I have had," he says, "a field of wheat full of moles all the year without doing it the least possible injury; but, on the contrary, I verily believe that up to harvest they did my crop good. Again, it is said moles eat seed corn; but this is a great mistake, for I have examined the stomachs of scores, but never found a single grain of corn in one of them. I believe 60,000 bushels of seed corn are annually destroyed by wire-worms." The mole, of course, is a great enemy of this subterranean pest.—London Graphic.

A Busy Maiden.

Busy little maiden, bustling all the day,
Before your fairly finger disorder flies away,

Dainty little maiden, I needs must let you know,
My heart is in disorder and you have made it so.

Pretty little maiden, your task is plainly seen—
Tidy up my heart, love, and be its chosen queen.

Dr. John Hall, of New York, has been giving a learned lecture on St. Valentine's Day. He finds that comic valentines are no modern inventions, but were sent in ancient times by maidens who desired to gently hint to certain young men that they were not the lovers who were wanted.

How to Save.

Smith Wanted What He Ordered.

Some years ago an Austin merchant whom we will call Smith, because that was, and is, the name painted on his signboard, sent an order for goods to a New York firm. He kept a very extensive general store, had plenty of money, kept all his accounts in a pocket memorandum book, and didn't know the difference between double entry bookkeeping and the science of hydrostatics.

Among other things he ordered was 12 gross assorted clothes pins,

12 " " grindstones.

When he ordered the grindstones he meant to order an assortment of twelve grindstones. The shipping clerk of the New York firm was astonished when he read the order. He went to the manager and said:

"For heaven's sake! what do they want with twelve gross—1,728 grindstones in Texas?" The manager said it must be a mistake, and telegraphed Smith:

"Wasn't it a mistake ordering so many grindstones?"

Old man Smith prided himself on never making a mistake. He had no copy of his order to refer to, and if he had he would not have referred to it, because he knew he had only ordered twelve grindstones. So he wrote back:

"Probably you think you know my business better than I do. I always order what I want, and I want what I order. Send on the grindstones."

The New York firm knew Smith was a little eccentric but that he always paid cash on receipt of invoice, and was able to buy a dozen quarries full of grindstones if he cared to indulge in such luxuries, so they filled his order as written and chartered a schooner, filled her full of grindstones, and cleared her for Galveston. They wrote to Smith and said that they hoped the consignment of grindstones by schooner would keep him going until they could charter another vessel. Smith sold grindstones at wholesale, and at low figures on long time for some three years afterward. Now, when Smith's wicked rivals in business want to perpetrate a practical joke on an innocent hardware drummer, they tell him that he had better not neglect to call on Smith, as they just heard the old man say he wanted to order some more grindstones. When the drummer calls on Smith, and, with a broad smile lighting up his countenance, says, "Mr. Smith, I understand you are needing some grindstones," there is a painful tableau that the reader can better imagine than we could describe.—Texas Siftings.

Bulls and Bears.

The etymology of the term "bear" is believed to be this: When a dealer in stocks, or for that matter in merchandise, had sold more than he was capable of delivering he was naturally bare of the article, and it was naturally his interest that prices should fall in order that he should cover his engagements and be no longer bare. From the adjective, the transition to the substantive of the same sound (bear) was easy. The growling bear being thus embodied, his antitype, the bull, was not long making an appearance. It is somewhat curious to find in the popular mind a diffused notion that bulls are the more virtuous creatures. This is sometimes a fallacy. The bull is usually a speculator who proposes to gain merely by market fluctuations, and to fish in troubled waters. The real investor, for instance, is often a bear in spirit because he awaits an opportunity to buy cheaply. The cotton manufacturer who contracts to sell cloth is in spirit a bear of yarn and other materials, which he requires to buy cheaply—that is, unless he has already bought too much of such materials, in which case he has over-traded. Some amount of speculations is no doubt good, wholesome, and necessary in business. It is only when the one party is much overpowered by the opposing party that mischief results. For years past the bulls have had their own way in France, being able to borrow money with singular facility, until a few months ago, when the aspect of things began to show signs of changing, and this week the bears have been paramount.—London News.

Raising Feed for Sheep.

The corn raised especially for sheep should be planted in drills, 3½ feet apart, and about six inches in the drill. It will ear sufficiently, and should be shocked when the ear is just passing out of the milk, in large, well-built shocks. And the most profitable use that can be made of this for winter feeding is, to run it through a cutter, directly from the shock, reducing to fine chaff, stalks, ears, and all. If cut one-fourth of an inch long, the sheep will eat it all clean: this we know from practical experience. With a large cutter, a ton can be cut in 20 to 30 minutes. This cut corn, fed in properly constructed troughs, will furnish both grain and coarse fodder. The only improvement you can make on this ration, without cooking, is to feed with it some more nitrogenous food, such as bran, linseed meal, or cotton seed meal. Wool is a nitrogenous product, and corn is too fattening a ration when fed alone.—National Live Stock Journal, Chicago.

The Ways of Two Women.

Two women got into a Third avenue car the other day, every seat of which was filled. One of the women had prematurely grey hair, and wore spectacles because she was near-sighted. The other was homely and carried a big bag.

A beautiful girl jumped up and said to the grey-haired woman:

"Take my seat, madam, I am younger than you."

Then every man in the car rose and offered his place to the beautiful girl, who only smiled sweetly and said:

"No, thank you, I prefer to stand."

Meanwhile the woman with grey hair hung to a strap and glared at the crowd.

"I may not be a chit of seventeen," she said, in vinegar tones," but I'm not infirm, I'd let you know, and can stand up as long as anybody!"

And the homely woman with the basket sat down in a space fourteen inches wide and wondered what it was all about.

DOWNS' ELIXIR.
N. H. DOWNS'
Vegetable Balsamic
ELIXIR
This valuable medicine is purely vegetable: the discovery of which was the result of many years' close study, in order to discover the cause, the symptoms, and the cure—viz: Consumption, Coughs, Colds, Catarrh, Croup, Asthma, Pleurisy, Hoarseness, Influenza, Spitting Blood, Bronchitis, and every species of oppression of the Chest and Lungs. In all cases where this Elixir has been duly administered its efficacy has been invariably manifested, convincing the most incredulous that is not incurable, if properly attended to.—Consumption, at its commencement, is but a slight irritation of the membrane which covers the Lungs; then an inflamation, when the cough is more observable, but rather dry; then becomes local fever and the pulse more frequent, the cheeks flushed and chills more common. This Elixir in curing the above complaints, operates so as to remove all morbid irritations and inflamation from the lungs to the surface, and finally expel them from the system. It facilitates expectoration.
CONSUMPTION
It heals the ulcerated surfaces
and relieves the cough and makes the breathing easy. It supports the strength and at the same time reduces the fever. It is free from strong opiate and astringent articles, which are of so drying a nature as to be in great danger of destroying the patient; whereas this medicine never dries or stops the cough, but, by removing the cause, generally destroys the hectic before the cough is entirely gone. Consequently, when the cough is cured the patient is well. Send address for pamphlet giving full directions for cure of pulmonary diseases.
Price 25 cts., 50 cts., and $1.00 per bottle.
SOLD EVERYWHERE.

MORTGAGE SALE.

ON the twentieth day of April, 1868, Peter Van Eps, and Nancy Van Eps, his wife, mortgaged to Elihu L. Clark all those tracts or parcels of land situate in the township of Hudson in the county of Lenawee and state of Michigan, bounded and described as follows, to wit: "Being village lot number five (5) on Lairds addition to the village of Hudson, being situated on sec on nineteen in said township of Hudson. Also the other piece or parcel of land situate in the village of Hudson, county of Lenawee, and state of Michigan, described as situated on section nineteen in said township, commencing on the north line of land deeded by Ann B. Cobb to Robert Laird, and sixteen rods west of the west division of fractions on said section nineteen and running thence northerly and parallel with the line of fractions till it strikes the southern angle line of land deeded by Harvey Cobb to Irene Street, and running thence westerly on said line of land now owned by John W. Pierce, thence southerly till it reaches the southern corner of said Pierce's lot; thence westerly on the south line of said Pierce's lot to a point four rods west of the line first above described and mentioned as a part of the boundary; thence northerly on a line parallel with the first described line to the north line of Robert Laird's land at a point four rods west of the place of beginning; thence easterly on said Laird's north line to the place of beginning, to secure the payment of one hundred and twenty-two dollars and the interest to accrue thereon. Said mortgage was on the 23d day of April, 1868 duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for Lenawee county in Liber U of mortgages on folios 276, 277, and 278. This mortgage was, on the 26th day of October, 1867, duly assigned by said Elihu L. Clark to John M. Osborn, which said assignment was on the 26th day of October, 1867, duly recorded in said Register's office in Liber 50 of mortgages, on pages 768 and 769. Default has been made in the conditions of said mortgage by the non-payment of the moneys due thereon by which the power of sale therein contained has become operative. There is now claimed to be due and unpaid on said mortgage the sum of two hundred and fourteen and seventy-five hundredths dollars, and no proceeding has been instituted at law or in equity to recover said sum or any part thereof. Notice is therefore hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage contained, and the statute in such case made and provided, I will sell at public vendue to the highest bidder at the front door of Dean's opera house in the city of Adrian, in said county of Lenawee, (that being the place of holding the circuit court in and for said county,) on the first day of May, 1882, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, the land above and in said mortgage described or so much thereof as may be necessary to satisfy the amount then due on said mortgage, the costs of this foreclosure and sale and a reasonable sum of money for an attorney fee as provided for in said mortgage in case of foreclosure.

Dated January 26th, 1882.

WASHINGTON NOTES.

The 108th call for bonds will soon be made by Secretary Folger.

The Panama Canal company has cleared the entire route for a width of 300 yards.

Col. Rufus Ingalls has been confirmed as quartermaster-general.

Senator Ben. Hill was able to go down to dinner Sunday, and relished his food.

Senator Logan is doing well, although he has not entirely recovered from his attack of rheumatism.

Congressman Allen (Mo.) is still very low, but was without pain Sunday. His physicians think he cannot survive the week.

The president has nominated Benjamin S. Parker, of Indiana, to be Consul at Shanghai.

Hon. S. S. Cox, of Cincinnati, is mentioned as likely to be made minister to the Sandwich Islands, in case minister Comly is recalled.

After July 1, postmasters will not be given allowances for advertising "dead letters," unless authority is first obtained from the first assistant postmaster-general.

The senate finance committee will recommend the passage of Senator Beck's bill to punish the unlawful certification of checks by national bank officers.

Senators David Davis, Logan, and Mahone have accepted an invitation to participate in a Fourth of July celebration and deliver addresses at Lake Bluff, Ill.

The committee on pensions expect to submit to the house this week a substitute for the numerous bills to pension the survivors of the Mexican and Indian wars.

The negotiations for an international copyright convention have been suspended, the present administration not holding the same views as the late President Garfield.

The question of public printer is still an open one. S. P. Rounds is as far from a nomination as ever. It is claimed by New York congressmen that the position will go to that state.

Representative Cobb, of Indiana, who recently began a war against such railroads as had not complied with the terms of their land grants, is planning still further attacks.

The committee on foreign affairs has decided to admit reporters to its sittings while investigating the alleged abstraction of the Peru-Chili correspondence from the state department.

The secretary of the interior decides, in the Eureka Springs case, in Kansas, that the property is agricultural land, subject to entry as such, reversing the decision of the commissioners of the general land office.

The committee on territories has instructed Aldrich to draw up a report in favor of the admission of Washington Territory as a State. The report will be written and read to the committee at its next meeting.

The Chinese minister, who is taking great interest in the debate on the Chinese bill in the senate, has expressed himself in favor of the proposed bill if a ten-year limit be established.

It is estimated that the mormons have spent $1,000,000 in lobbying for their protection in congress this season. The faithful are now boasting that there will be no more hostile legislation.

Domestic makers of mineral waters are trying to have the tax on the foreign apollinaris water restored. A big contest is looked for in the matter, and Conkling, it is said, has been retained by the apollinaris proprietors at a $50,000 fee.

The secretary of the interior has selected or set apart twenty-seven and one-half sections of land, if it proves satisfactory, as a portion of the seventy-two sections of land to be confirmed to the University of Dakota, according to act of congress.

The Fitzpatrick court-martial record, with Judge Advocate General Swaim's report, has been submitted to the secretary of war. The case now goes to the president, and the general impression is that the sentence of dismissal will be commuted to some lighter punishment.

Dr. Lange, P. Gray, of Utica, N. Y., whose expert testimony in the Guiteau trial was so conclusive, is in Washington. He comes at the request of the district attorney to examine the medical testimony in the bill of exceptions.

The senate committee on Indian affairs will make a favorable report on Mr. Cox's bill to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to members of tribes in reservations, and to extend the operations of the civil and criminal laws of the respective states or territories over such area.

The secretary of the treasury has directed the transfer from the Philadelphia mint to the treasury here of $17,000,000 gold coin, to relieve the vaults, now crowded to the utmost capacity. The secretary also directed the transfer of $5,345,082 gold bullion from the assay office, New York, to the mint at Philadelphia.

By mistake the telegram of March 3, from Secretary Frelinghuysen to Minister Lowell was given to the New York Associated Press with "the words "for the deed" omitted. The dispatch, as published in the Washington Star of March 3, is correct, and reads: "The feeling of indignation for the deed, and thankfulness for the queen's safety, is deep and universal."

The secretary of war telegraphed Gen. Hancock, approving the order in Sergt. Mason's case, providing for Mason's imprisonment in the penitentiary at Albany. The sentence of the court-martial upon Sergt. Mason for shooting at Guiteau was communicated to Mason Saturday afternoon. He received it with apparent indifference. Already petitions have been prepared asking his pardon from the president. Numerous signatures were obtained to one this evening. One ground for asking it is that there is reason to believe Mason was insane.

The committee on naval affairs has made a favorable report in the house upon the bill to restore to the active list of the navy Thomas G. Corbin, now a captain on the retired list. The bill provides that his name shall be placed on the navy register next after Rear Admiral J. W. A. Nicholson, and also provides that he shall receive the difference in pay from the date of his retirement, December 12, 1873, to the date of his restoration (which is named November 15, 1880), between that of a captain on retired pay and a rear admiral on waiting orders (sic).

The house committee on printing has agreed to report to the house favorably Mr. Springer's joint resolution providing for the publishing and distribution of 7,000 copies of the first three volumes of the official records, union and confederate, of the late war. Also favorable reports on the resolutions to print 2,000 copies of a special report on the insects affecting forest trees; 1,000 copies of a special report, entitled "Bibliography of Economic Entomology," and 1,000 extra copies of the authentic list of merchant vessels of the United States.

District Surveyor William Forsyth has discovered, among the old District archives in his office, a manuscript map, made in 1792, showing the boundary lines between the states of Virginia (now West Virginia), Maryland, and Pennsylvania. The size is about twenty inches by four feet. It shows Braddock's Road, on his march to Fort Duquesne, from Fort Cumberland, on the Potomac river, to Red Stone fort, on the Monongalia river, and the point where Lord Fairfax fixed a stone at the head of the Potomac river in making the survey for the boundary line; Braddock's grave, in Pennsylvania, near the Maryland line, at Big Meadows, and many other interesting places.

The house committee on territories reported favorably the bill to enable Washington territory to gain admittance to the union. Every territory is clamoring for admission, Washington and Dakota leading the way. It is doubtful, however, if either of them get in this winter. The original bill has been slightly amended by striking out the provision adding to the territory part of Idaho. Another amendment prohibits any town or county from undertaking or lending its credit to any indebtedness of any incorporation or company, and that the indebtedness of the state shall never exceed $1 per capita to the population.

YPSILANTI's council has authorized the city attorney to bring suit at once against all parties selling liquor in that city who have failed to file bonds.

CONGRESSIONAL.

MAR. 6.—In the senate, Mr. Allison presented a memorial from the Iowa legislature for a bridge over the Missouri river above Omaha. Mr. Ingalls reported favorably a bankruptcy bill embodying the equity system; Mr. Vest a measure for the incorporation of the interoceanic ship railway, and Mr. Teller the house bill to pension Mrs. Garfield, with an amendment to include $5,000 per annum for Mrs. Polk and Mrs. Tyler. Mr. Beck made a favorable report on the bill to punish the unlawful certification of bank checks, and Mr. Dawes handed back the act to ratify the agreement between the Crow Indians and the Northern Pacific road. A joint resolution was passed to authorize the secretary of war to use hospital tents for the sufferers by overflow. When the Chinese bill came up, the Pacific coast senators called attention to the recent chain of meetings in opposition to the Celestials. Messrs. Dawes and Edmunds retaliated by giving their views on the issue.

MAR. 8.—In the senate, Mr. Garland introduced a bill for the construction or repair of levees on the Mississippi, and Mr. Jackson reported an appropriation of $25,000 to continue the improvements of the harbor at Memphis. The motion to refer to the finance committee, the bill for a liquor commission was lost, and the measure was laid aside. The Chinese bill came up. Mr. Ingall's amendment to limit to ten years the suspension of immigration was defeated by a tie vote. Mr. Platt made a lengthy argument against the measure, and Messrs. Edmunds and Hoar had an interesting war of words. Mr. Saunders submitted a joint resolution for a constitutional amendment allowing the people to elect marshals, district attorneys, postmasters, and internal revenue officers.

MAR. 9.—In the senate, a resolution was passed instructing the secretary of state to ascertain the cause of the imprisonment in Great Britain of an American citizen named Daniel McSweeney. A resolution by Mr. Sawyer was adopted, instructing the secretary of war to report the cost of constructing the Sturgeon Bay canal in Wisconsin, with a view to making it free to commerce. The bill for a liquor commission was taken up, and it was agreed that not more than three shall be prohibitionists. The Chinese bill was amended to provide that no Celestial shall be naturalized within the United States, and that no laborers can immigrate within twenty years, and then passed, by a vote of 29 to 15.

MAR. 10.—The senate adopted a resolution requesting the president to arrange with Nicaragua for the settlement of public and private claims. A resolution was passed directing the use of government vessels in distributing supplies along the Mississippi and its tributaries. A bill was passed for the creation of a commission on the liquor traffic, to be composed of seven persons. Mr. Voorhees introduced a bill appropriating $125,000 for the improvement of the Wabash river. The senate refused to take up the Japanese indemnity-fund bill by a vote of 14 to 34. An adjournment to Monday was taken.

HOUSE.

MAR. 6.—The house passed the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill. Mr. Belford introduced a resolution requesting the president to appeal to the Czar to protect the Jews in Russia. Mr. Hewitt introduced a bill to restore to the pension rolls the names dropped for participation in the rebellion. An interesting debate took place on the bill to permit producers of leaf tobacco to sell the same without license, but the rules were not suspended. An appropriation of $100,000 was made to continue work on the Davis island dam in the Ohio river.

MAR. 7.—In the house a bill was passed for a local board of inspectors of hulls and boilers at Gallipolis, Ohio. An appropriation of $20,000 was made to erect a statue to Chief Justice John Marshall. In committee of the whole on the state of the Union, the tariff-commission bill was tabled by 77 to 30. A bill from the senate, authorizing the secretary of war to use hospital tents for the relief of sufferers from the overflow of the Mississippi was passed.

MAR. 8.—In the house, Mr. Reed reported amendments to the rules, which were laid over. Mr. Harris reported a bill for the construction of naval vessels. A bill authorizing the purchase of the Freedmen's bank building at Washington for $250,000 was passed, as was also an appropriation of $7,500 to aid the Society of the Army of the Cumberland to erect a statue to General Garfield.

MAR. 9.—In the house Mr. Dunnell reported a bill for canceling stamps on tobacco exported by rail. A bill was also reported for the admission into the union of the territory of Washington. The agricultural appropriation bill came up, and amendments were adopted for statistics in regard to the manufacture and exportation of oleomargarine, for statements of freight charges by rail and river, to appropriate $35,000 for experiments in making sugar, and to increase the allowance for investigating forestry, when the bill passed.

MAR. 10.—In the house, a minority report was presented, declaring U. D. Ball entitled to a seat as delegate from Alaska. Four memorials from Utah, with over 16,000 thousand signatures, were presented, asking a suspension of action on all bills relating to that territory and the appointment of an impartial commission to determine the state of affairs. An appropriation of $100,000 for extra expenses by the light-house board caused by the flood in the Mississippi was passed. A joint resolution for the use of government steamers in distributing supplies to sufferers by overflow was adopted. The senate then took up the private calendar, with Mr. Davis, of Illinois, in the chair. An evening session was held to consider pension bills, at which seventy-seven were passed.

The Assassin's Doom.

"If Guiteau is insane, his madness is of a kind the law was designed to punish," says a well-known attorney. Undoubtedly. No question now remains as to the certainty of his punishment. His life and trial have already become matters of history. Dr. Ridpath, the eminent biographer of General Garfield, has written the history of the assassin in a style which the public will relish, and added it to his "Life and Work of Garfield," making the record of the tragedy and its principal actors complete in one large and handsome volume in which the grandeur and glory of Garfield's life are strangely contrasted with the infamy of his murderer. Published by J. C. Chilton & Co., Detroit, Mich. The "Life and Trial of Guiteau" is also issued in a separate volume, at a very moderate price.

Clergymen, lawyers, physicians, farmers, merchants, business men, gentlemen of leisure, and their women folk and children, all use Brown's Iron Bitters. It keeps them well.

"Public Men of To-day,"

Is the title of a new book which A. W. Mills announces. The work is original in conception, admirable in execution, and invaluable as a work of reference, and for illustrating what our institutions and civilization can accomplish. The recognized ability of the author, the skill of the artists employed, and the reputation of the publishers, are guarantees of the merits and excellence of the work. The volume, which is a library in itself, will have a permanent value as a book of reference, and will be a constant educator to all who consult its prolific pages. It affords a vast amount of important and desirable information concerning the workings of our government, as exhibited in the lives, and words, and deeds of those who make, interpret and execute our country's laws. The more than three hundred life-like portraits of the subjects, constitute an exceedingly attractive feature of the volume and greatly enhance its value. The specimen pages foreshadow a work which every family must highly prize. We heartily commend "Public Men of To-day" to our readers. See advertisement in another column.

At a regular meeting Monday evening, March 13, 1882, of Tecumseh Lodge, No. 870, Knights of Honor, the following resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, The sad intelligence of the death in a distant state of our esteemed brother, Henry M. Cram, has been communicated to this lodge, of which he was a charter member, acting efficiently in its organization as its first Reporter, and by his daily life ever commending our order, the Knights of Honor, as being worthy the name it bears. Therefore be it

Resolved, That it is but a just tribute to the memory of our departed brother to say that all his intercourse with us fraternally and as a fellow citizen has been such as to command our highest respect and regard.

Resolved, That we sincerely condole with the family of our deceased brother, and commend them for consolation to him who orders all the events of our lives and whose chastisements are sent in mercy. And

Resolved, That a copy of this testimonial of our sympathy and sorrow be sent to the family of the deceased, be spread upon the records of the Lodge and furnished the Tecumseh HERALD for publication.

AROUND THE COUNTY.

FRANKLIN.

Friday, March 17th, was the closing day of school for the winter term in the Paragon School of Franklin. In the afternoon the pupils presented to their teacher, Miss S. E. Gamble a nice present as a token of esteem. In the evening the officers, patrons and friends assembled in large numbers, as there was a literary program to be presented by the school. The room was very tastefully decorated for the occasion with banners, mottos, pictures and evergreen-trimmings. The exercises consisted in Singing, Tableaux, dialogues and declamations, which were first-class in character and well rendered by those taking part in them. This closes the fourth term in the Paragon by Miss Gamble.

COM.

EAST TECUMSEH.

Mrs. Guiwits, who was stricken with paralysis last fall is gradually improving.

Mrs. O. Keith nee Emma DePuy is reported to be in a very critical condition.

Mr. C. W. Culbertson is preparing to build a dwelling house the coming summer.

We understand that B. F. DePuy has become a composer of songs.

W. Cleveland returned from Ohio last Friday with a fine young horse. Ask him the price.

J. W. Benedict and son have purchased a new carriage engine, and the sweet smiles of Frank as he watches the inspirator, and George's lively work at the mill, is worth going miles to see.

On account of the terrible condition of the roads, Saturday evening, March 18th, there was no Literary. As the next regular meeting, April 1st, will be the last night of the quarter, there will be an election of officers and the following program will be presented:

Local Music—Nellie Boyce.
Declamation—W. L. Stewart.
Recitation—Kate Boyce.
Recitation—Charles Nobles.
Select Reading—Fred Goheen.
Declamation—Leota Lanning.
Vocal Music—Miranda Robertson and John Boyce.
Chip-basket—S. E. Hendershot.
Inst. Music—S. I. Osborne.
Question—Resolved, That a man is fortunate to be born poor.
Aff.—Andrew Murphy, Jas. H. Aten, Frank Benedict.
Neg.—W. L. Stewart, Fred. Hendershot, J. L. VanDoren.

RIDGEWAY.

J. Hall has a new fence in front of his residence.

Smith & Co., started their stave mill Tuesday.

The Republican caucus will be held Saturday, April 1st, at 2 o'clock P. M.

Ed Hoagland who has been quite low for some time with consumption died Tuesday. The funeral services were held Wednesday at 11 o'clock.

There seems to be a desire in the east and north part of the township to have the voting place changed from the village to Britton. It is to be hoped that no effort will be made to spring this question by a viva voce vote on election day, for if a vote is ever taken upon the question it ought to be by ballot and after due notice has been given.

The telegraph poles to be used in the local line from the station to the village are on the way from Saginaw and will be set as soon as the ground is dry enough to dig the holes.

Now then for business. All those who are interested in keeping above ground, or in other words, in having the turnpike graveled east of the Ridge are invited and requested to meet at the Britton school house next Saturday evening, at 7 o'clock, to organize an effort looking in that direction. Now, if ever, something can be done, after wallowing through the mud for six months.

CLINTON.

There is talk of a new firm in town.

Uncle Hiram Reynolds is not as well as usual this week.

The funeral services of Morris Sage were held Friday afternoon of last week at the house.

Charlie and John Clark are struggling with measles. The last we heard of the case, the measles had the floor.

Confirmation services will be held at St. John's Episcopal church Thursday evening, March 30. They will be conducted by Bishop Harris of this diocese.

B. O. Randall started last week for East Saginaw, where he will remain a few weeks. It is hoped that the change will improve his health.

Rev. G. E. Wilson will preach his farewell sermon Sunday, March 26.

Some little (?) boys were playing along the bank of the Raisin last Sunday and as no good little Sunday school boy was along to dissuade them from their wicked course their fun was carried a trifle further than was quite proper. One little (?) boy whom we will call George, caught the hat of another little fellow, Charlie by name, and throwing it into the air put a ball through it, and to appease the wrath of the other offered him his hat and pistol, but Charlie, bent on more desperate revenge, threw the pistol into the stream, where it is likely to remain, all efforts to the contrary notwithstanding.

WEST TECUMSEH.

B. Dove has moved on the farm of G. W. Stacy.

Mrs. W. B. Keyser is on the sick list.

F. W. DePuy's horse ran away last week; a broken buggy the result.

Hattie, daughter of A. H. Updyke, of Franklin, while visiting at her uncles, M. G. Updyke's, was taken very sick last Thursday and has not been able to be moved home yet.

DEATH OF ALONZO L. SMITH.

When we review from day to day, and see our nearest and most worthy citizens leaving us, it causes the tears of sorrow to course down the saddening face. When the portals of the tomb closed over the mortal form of A. L. Smith, it caused a deep well of grief to full four hundred of his friends and neighbors who were present at the burial services. Our departed friend was born in Columbus Township Chenango County, State of New York, April 25th, 1814. His younger days were passed in the vicinity of Paris Hill, N. Y. In the month of September 1835 he came to Woodstock, Mich., with his father's family, where land had been purchased on both sides of the turnpike on section ten. Immediately after he came here he assisted in building the Brooklyn flouring mill from the basement to finishing the whole structure. March 29, 1837 he was married to Miss Lovina Blackmar of Cambridge, by whom he had five children, all now living and married except one, who died at the age of 16 years. The citizen pioneer began his clearing on the pleasant and now fertile farm in the year 1839. Farming was his business until the day of his last sickness. In town affair he has manifested much interest, was road commissioner for several years, Justice of the Peace four years, School Inspector over twenty years. He resided here over forty-six years, and is probably as well known as any one in Woodstock. When he first came here there were but a few log shanties in the town. They have gradually been replaced by comfortable, and in many instances, costly farm mansions with beautiful outbuildings and delightful walks. He was honest, enterprising and liberal to a fault. No one ever went from his house hungry if he knew it. The writer of these lines has often been cheerfully and sumptuously entertained in this now bereaved and saddened home. Through all the privations and sickness incident to a pioneer life, also, all the varied experiences of after years, he has manifested an unfaltering trust in God, a cheerful hope, a tender sympathy, a devoted christian and warden of the Episcopal Church for more than forty years, with a charity which thinketh no evil. He has left to his children, grand children and wife, the rich legacy, the precious memory of a beautiful and well-spent life. His father was instantly killed by a horse in the year 1868. His brother of Alpine, Kent Co., died in 1876, by falling from a loaded wagon. Now by injuries received February 2nd., in falling from a load of hay at Woodstock, Alonzo Lockwood Smith departed this life March 16, 1882, aged nearly 68 years.

A Word of Caution.

As is usually the case where an article of true merit has attained a world wide reputation by its wonderful results, as the celebrated Electric Bitters have done, certain unprincipled parties have endeavored to imitate them, and expect to induce an unsuspecting public to purchase their fraudulent wares. Ask your druggist for the genuine Electric Bitters, that are guaranteed to cure, and take no others. Sold by all druggists at 50c.

Cut this out and Preserve it.

The blood is the life. Keep the fountain pure and disease will soon vanish. Red is now all the rage, especially Red Clover Blossom as prepared by J. M. Loose & Co., Monroe, Mich., who prepares it in a peculiar manner, known only to themselves. It has long been known by the medical profession as a great remedy for cancer, rheumatism, scrofula, salt rheum, etc., and many in their practice are only too glad to avail themselves of its present form. Prepared in pure fluids and solid extracts, pills and dried blossoms. Ask your druggist, Wright & Co., about it. See list of testimonials and try it. Correspondence with patients and practicing physicians respectfully solicited.

Indulgent parents who allow their children to eat heartily of high-seasoned food, rich pies, cake, &c., will have to use Hop Bitters to prevent indigestion, sleepless nights, sickness, and perhaps death. No family is safe without them in the house.

Aged Gratitude.

Wasn't She Cute?

She knew it was necessary to be beautiful to be attractive. She knew health gave beauty a peculiar charm, therefore she made free use of Brown's Iron Bitters, and her captivating smile seemed like a beam of sunshine; her eyes were bright and sparkling, and her skin, oh, 'twas most wondrous fair! Well worthy of a trial is this valuable medicine by all our lady friends.—Fashion Paper.

TRAVELERS who hate to "eat what is set before them asking no questions," are often disturbed with the suspicion that they are eating oleomargarine for butter. Not only has this product been largely manufactured in this country, but during last year 25,000,000 pounds of it are reported to have been exported. There is ground for well founded distrust.—Safety is in knowing of whom one makes purchases.

THE FAMILY CIRCLE.

PEGGING AWAY.

There was an old shoemaker, sturdy as steel,
Of great wealth and repute in his day,
Who if questioned his secret of luck to reveal,
Would chirp like a bird on a spray,
"It isn't so much the vocation you're in,
Or your liking for it," he would say,
"As it is that forever, through thick and through thin,
You should keep on a pegging away."

[illegible]
Gaper rather happening to the main
And which well might be vaunted awkwardly by youth
In the labor of hand and of brain;
For ever if genius and talent are cast
Into Work with the strongest display,
You can rest of be sure of achievement at last
Unless you keep pegging away.

There are chances wh might into existence have grown,
Politicians for hands only made,
Some poets who better in shops had grown
And merchants that suited for trade;
But when once to the harness, however it fit,
Harkle down to your work night and day,
Secure to the triumph of hand and of wit
If you only keep pegging away.

There are times it shall take, when the direst
Advises a pause or a change;
And, on field far away and irrelevant bent,
The purpose is tempted to range;
Never heed, but in sound recreation restore
Such trains as are slow to obey,
And then, more persistent and staunch than before,
Keep pegging and pegging away.

Leave fitful endeavors for such as would cast
Their spendthrift existence in vain;
For the secret of wealth in the present and past,
And of fame and of honor, is plain:
It lies not in change, nor in sentiment nice
Nor in wayward caprich and display,
But just in the shoemaker's homely advice
To keep pegging and pegging away.

THREE WARNINGS.

It was in the days of our grandmothers, when brick ovens were in the land, when Mr. Hubbard bought his house, and bought it very much against his wife's will. It was a lonely house, and reported to be haunted. It was next to a graveyard which, though unused was not at all cheerful, and which likewise had the reputation of a ghost. However Mr. Hubbard did not believe in ghosts, and was too cheerful to be depressed by warnings, and never intended to be lonely.

"Mrs. Hubbard," he said, when his wife shook her head at the purchase, "I got it cheap and it is a good one. You will like it when you get there, if you do not, why then talk."

So the house was bought and into it the Hubbard family went. There was scarce a chance for a ghost to show his face in such a family of boys and girls. Mr. and Mrs. Hubbard counted ten of them, all noisy ones.

Having once spoken her mind in regard to the house, Mrs. Hubbard gave up the point. She scrubbed and scoured, tacked down carpets put up curtains, and owned that the place was pretty.

As not a ghost appeared for a week she made up her mind that there were no such inhabitants. She even began not to mind the tombstones. So the house got to rights, and baking day came about. In the press of business they had a great deal of baker's bread, and had become tired of it. Mrs. Hubbard never enjoyed setting a batch of bread to rise so much as that which was to be eaten for the first time in the new house.

"For I cannot get up an appetite for stuff that nobody knows who had the making of," said Mrs. Hubbard, "and all puffy and alumy besides."

So into the oven went the bread, and out it came, at the proper time, even and brown as loaves could be. Mrs Hubbard turned them up on their sides as she drew them forth, and they stood in the long bread-tray, glorious proof of her skill and the excellence of the oven, when Tommy Hubbard bounded in.

Tommy was four, and when at that age we are prone to believe that anything will bear our weight. Tommy, therefore anxious to inspect the bread tray, swung himself off his feet by clutching the edge of the bread tray, and over it came, loaves and Tommy and all.

Mrs. Hubbard flew to the rescue, and picked up the loaves. All were dusted and put in the tray once more but one. That lay bottom upward under the table.

"A bothering child, to give me so very much trouble," she said, as she crawled under the table to get it. "A—O—ah—dear—dear—oh—O—my!—"

And there on the floor sat Mrs. Hubbard screaming, wringing her hands and shaking her head. The children screamed in concert. Mr. Hubbard rushed into the house from where he was at work.

"What's the matter mother?" he gasped.

Mrs. Hubbard pointed to the bottom of the loaf lying in her lap.

"Look there and see!" she said. "It is a warning, William; I am going to be taken from them all!"

And he looked, and he saw a death's head and crossbones as plainly engraven on the bottom of the loaf as could be.

"It is accident" said Mr. Hubbard, "Some queer pranks do come you know."

But Mrs. Hubbard was in a troubled state of mind, as was natural.

"The stories about the haunted house were true," she said. "The spirits have marked the loaf, and I am afraid it is a warning."

And the loaf was put aside, for even Mr. Hubbard did not dare to eat any of it himself.

Mrs. Hubbard got over her fright at last, but the news of the awfully marked loaf spread through R———, and the people came to Hubbard's all the week to look at it. It was a death's-head and crossbones, certainly—every one saw at a glance—but as to its meaning, people differed. Some believed that it was a warning of approaching death, some thought that the spirits wanted to frighten the Hubbard's away, and get possession of the house all to themselves.

The latter supposition inspired Mrs. Hubbard with courage. Finally, being a brave woman, she adopted the belief; and when another day arrived for baking put her loaves into the oven once more, prepared for crossbones, and not to be frightened by them.

The loaves baked as before. They came out brown and crusty as Mrs. Hubbard turned each in her hands. There were no skull and crossbones, but on the last were sundry characters of letters. What, no one could tell, until there dropped in for a chat a certain printer of the neighborhood, accustomed to reading things backward.

"By George!" said he, "that is curious—re-e-s-u-r-g-a-m—resurgam; that is what is on the loaf—resurgam."

"It is what they put on tombs, isn't it?" asked poor Mrs. Hubbard, faintly.

"Well, yes," said Mr. Hubbard, being obliged to admit it. "But it is not so bad as crossbones and skulls."

Mrs. Hubbard clock her head.

"It's even solemner," said the little woman, who was not as good a linguist as bread maker. "I feel confident, William, that I will soon be resurgamed, and what will these dear children do then?"

And now that the second loaf was before her eyes, marked even more awfully than before, Mrs. Hubbard grew really pale and thin and lost her cheerfulness.

"I have a presentment," she said over and over again, that the third baking will decide who the warning belongs to. I believe it is meant for me, and time will show, [illegible] see how [illegible] ing."

And though Mr. Hubbard laughed, he also began to be troubled.

The third baking day was one of gloom. Solemnly as at a funeral, the family assembled to assist in the drawing.

Five loaves came out starkless; but on remained.

Mrs. Hubbard's hand trembled, but she drew it forth. She put it on the tray. She turned it softly about. At last she exposed the lower surface. On it were letters printed backward, plainly enough read this time and arranged thus:

Died April 3d, lamented by her large family.

"It's me!" cried Mrs. Hubbard, "I am to go to-morrow—this is the 1st. I do feel faint—yes I do. It's awful, and so sudden!"

And Mrs. Hubbard fainted away in the arms of the most terrified of men and husbands.

The children screamed, the cat mewed, the dog barked. The oldest boy ran for the doctor. People flocked to the Hubbard's. The loaf was examined. Yes, there was Mrs. Hubbard's warning—her call to quit this world.

She lay in bed, bidding good-bye to her family, her strength going fast. She read the Bible, and tried not to grieve too much. The doctor shook his head. The clergyman prayed with her. Nobody doubted but that her end was near, for people were so very superstitious in those days.

They had been up all night with good Mrs. Hubbard, and dawn was breaking, and with it she was sure that she must go, when clattering up the road and up to the house came a man, who alighted. He rattled the knocker and rushed in. There was no stopping him. Up the stairs he went to Mrs. Hubbard's room and bolted into it.

"Parding," said he breathlessly, "I heard Mrs. Hubbard was dying, and she'd warning on her baking. I came over to explain. You see I was sexton of a church here a few years ago, and I knew all about it. You needn't die of fear just yet, Mrs. Hubbard, for it's neither spirits and demons about, nor yet warnings. What makes the loaves is old Mrs. Finkle's tombstone. I took it for an oven bottom, seeing there were no survivors, and bricks were dear. The last folks before you didn't get them printed off on their loaves because they used tins; and we got used to the marks ourselves. Crossbones and skulls we put up with, and never thought of caring for resurgam. So you see how it is, and I am sorry you have been scared."

Nobody said a word. The minister shut his book. The doctor walked to the window.

There was a deadly silence; Mrs. H. sat up in bed.

"William," said she to her husband, "the first thing you do get a new bottom for that oven."

And the tone assured the assemblage of anxious friends that Mrs. Hubbard was not going to die just yet.

Indeed, she came down the next day. And when the oven had been reconstructed, the first thing she did was to give invitations for a large tea-drinking—on which occasion the loaves came out all right.

How a Bet was Won.

An English officer exchanged into another regiment, bringing with him the reputation of being marvelously successful at a bet. "Ah," said his new colonel, "he won't get any success out of me, I'll warrant;" and he wrote to the fellow's former colonel, an old friend: "We like him very much." "Glad you do, old boy; keep him; we found him too expensive a luxury," was the reply. One day at mess the colonel good humoredly said: "I hear that you profess always to win a bet?" "Well, sir, I'm pretty successful that way." "I don't think you would be successful with me." "May I try?" asked the subaltern. "By all means." "Well, then, I bet you, sir, that that old wound in your back has broken out afresh." "What in the world do you mean? Old wound in my back? D'you think I ever turned my back on the enemy, then?" and the gallant colonel grew warm: "I never had a wound in my back in my life. Jones," to a cornet, "lock the door. I'll prove it to your own eyes." The other protested that the colonel's simple word was more than enough; but no, the latter was excited, and stripped. "I've lost, sir," and Brown handed over the $10 note. A few days later came a note from the colonel of the other regiment: "Brown has again won a pot of money out of us fellows. He bet heavily that before he'd been with you a month he'd make you take your shirt off in the mess room after dinner, and now writes that he succeeded." That colonel "cussed."

Demoralization of Hotel Life.

In the family circle we are brought into closer relationship with those who serve us, and as we see the labor involved in keeping house, it tends to keep alive our sympathies and better feelings. Hotel life for a constancy is necessarily pernicious, and eventually causes selfishness and a disregard of the feelings of others. I believe that the comforts and splendors of hotel life in New York are in a measure responsible for its degenerate morals. The husband who is not indebted to his wife for the comforts of a home does not love her as faithfully as he would do were such the case. The wife whose time is all her own, and who has nothing to do toward rendering home agreeable, is apt to fill up that time with gossip and frivolous pursuits. In this way both parties are gradually alienated from each other's society and find pleasure elsewhere. As they are not satisfied with themselves, so they find fault with one another, and domestic quarrels ensue, and the courts are filled with divorce cases, and married life becomes insupportable.

How to Save.

All hard workers are subject to bilious attacks, which may end in dangerous illness. Parker's Ginger Tonic will keep the kidneys and liver active, and by preventing the attack save much sickness, loss of time and expense. Delay at such time means danger.—Detroit Press. See other column.

Miscellaneous Recipes.

Chocolate Cream.—Put over the fire one quart of milk; when it comes to a boil add three tablespoonfuls of chocolate. Thicken with corn starch and sweeten to taste. Flavor with vanilla. Serve cold with cream.

Squash Muffins.—Take one cup of squash, one cup of sour milk, two tablespoonfuls of sugar, one tablespoonful of melted butter, a little salt and one tablespoonful of soda; add flour until they are stiff enough [illegible]

Oyster Pancakes.—Roll oysters in a cloth to keep it straight. Put a layer in a dish seasoned with butter, salt and pepper, then a layer of oysters, alternate, until the dish is full. Then mix some grated bread with a beaten egg. Spread over the top and bake.

Dyspepsia Bread.—One pint bowl of graham flour; dissolve one-half spoonful of soda in two-thirds of a cup of yeast, and add to the mixture one teacupful of molasses; pour in sufficient warm water to make it somewhat thinner than flour bread.

To Keep Bread Moist.—Have the dough stiff when it is set for the last rising. The larger the proportion of flour to that of moisture in the dough the longer it will keep moist. After the bread is baked and cold put it in a tin box or an earthen jar with close cover and keep it covered tightly. Bread thus made and kept cool and always from the air will last and be moist for a week.

Angel Pudding.—Two ounces of flour, two ounces of powdered sugar, two ounces of butter melted in half a pint of new milk, two eggs; mix well. Bake the above in small patty-pans until nicely browned, and send to table on a dish covered with a serviette. A little powdered sugar should be sifted over each pudding, and slices of lemon served with them. The eggs must be well beaten before they are added to the other ingredients.

Baked Egg Plant.—Boil a large egg plant in plenty of water until it is perfectly tender, trying it with a straw; let it stand in the colander to drain until cold; then peel, cut open, and take out the seeds; mash carefully with a gill of milk, two eggs, a dessertspoonful of salt a saltspoonful of white pepper, half a grated nutmeg, a heaping tablespoonful of very fine bread crumbs. Bake half an hour in quick oven; a slow oven spoils it.

Pies.—Always bake pies on tin plates, as they are thinner and bake better on the bottom; and they do not have a bad taste after much use. Pies should be rimmed with strips of paste. For apple pies cooked fruit is best, and should be sweetened too sweet for the taste before the final cooking. Heap the filling in the centre, as it will naturally tend towards the edge. No flavoring is better than nutmeg. In rolling top paste do not use flour, and roll but two ways—from you and to one side. Cut the top paste larger than the pie plate and draw it into the edge by raising it in the centre.

Cream Dressing.—When oil is disliked in salads the following dressing will be found excellent: Rub the yolks of two hard boiled eggs very fine with a spoon, incorporate with them a dessertspoonful of mixed mustard; then stir in a tablespoonful of melted butter, half a teacupful of thick cream, a saltspoonful of salt, and cayenne pepper enough to take up on the point of a very small pen-knife-blade, and a few drops of anchovy or Worcestershire sauce, and, very carefully, sufficient vinegar to reduce the mixture to a smooth creamy consistency, and pour it upon lettuce carefully prepared for the table.

References.

The name of a well-known quaker (this was at the end of the last century) was once given as a reference by a young man of good character who was just entering business. The quaker emphatically recommended credit, but the young man almost at once fell into bad habits, neglected his business, and became insolvent. The injured creditor met the quaker and complained that he had been deceived by his representations and had thereby lost five hundred pounds. The quaker replied that what he had stated was then true, and he also had been deceived, but as it was on his recommendation that credit had been given he would pay the debt, and then and there did so by a check on his bankers. Now this is a very pretty little story, and the good quaker in the then existing state of the law could not have been legally compelled to make good the loss. There is a commercial moral however with which all our readers may not be acquanted, and it is this: if in these days a man on being applied to for a reference makes a bread and positive statement in writing, or even verbally, that so-and-so is perfectly solvent, and that credit may be safely given, and on this declaration credit is given, the person or firm who foolishly gave so unqualified a reference is legally liable for the resulting loss in case of bankruptcy. Some firms on this account make a rule of refusing, under any circumstances whatever, to lend their names as references—but this seems a somewhat strained, if not cruel, proceeding. The best plan is to state honestly and fairly what is known, the amount of credit—if any—that is being given by the firm applied to, coupled with the intimation that the firm applying must use their own discretion entirely as to whether credit be given at all, as it is against rules to guarantee the commercial status of any one.

DIDN'T READ THE PAPERS.—The Presbyterian congregation at Brussels, Ohio, made up a purse of $100 for their pastor, the Rev. Mr. Cunningham, to meet the expenses of his vacation. The reverend gentleman decided to spend the time and money in St. Louis, where an industrial fair was in progress. He had not been in that city an hour before he met an affable young man, who knew all about him and the folks at Brussels, and who brought him to a room where a game of chance was going on. The manager permitted the clergyman to draw several times without charge, and then informed him that there was $700 to his credit. The gambler proposed to pay this with a "good as gold" check for $800, which he professed to have just won from a solid merchant, taking the $100 difference in money. The pastor fell into the trap, and parted with the $100, receiving a worthless check. At the police station he was asked if he had never read newspaper accounts of such swindles. "I only read the religious journals," he replied, "and never pay much attention to the secular press."

Spots on the Sun.

It seems strange to say that the geography of the moon, or at least very much of that portion of her surface which is presented to our view, is better known than that of many parts of our own earth; and yet this is quite true. Our telescopes are of such power that if there were an object on the moon's surface as large as the Crystal Palace, they would infallibly reveal it to us, and so the astronomer would be able, if not to "visit it," at least to "give it a name, and get it at last into guide-books," as Dr. Cumming says of the heavens. Most elaborate maps of the moon have been made, and it has been satisfactorily proved that she herself is a solid body, probably composed of rocks much like these on our planet, but not provided either with water or with any trace of an atmosphere.

About the sun's geography we know less; in fact we can hardly see the sun himself at all, for the solid core is surrounded by a sort of atmosphere called the "photosphere," or light-sphere, whence it is on good grounds, believed that the light and heat proceed.

When we come to examine the sun by the aid of the telescope, we find that all parts of the surface do not give out light to the same extent, and that there are certain places on it darker, and some brighter, than the remainder of the disc. The former are called sunspots, the latter faculæ, which are always associated with spots.

The first person who examined sunspots closely was the illustrious Galileo, who proceeded to determine from them the sun's velocity of rotation on his axis; for he perceived that they moved across the sun's body. However, since his time, it has been shown that the spots have a motion of their own; those at the sun's equator moving faster than those at his poles; so that observations on the spots alone cannot tell us the rapidity of the revolution of the sun's entire mass. It has also been noticed that the number of these spots visible at one time does not remain the same from year to year, and, in fact, that about every ten years there is an epoch at which they are especially abundant. General Sabine has pointed out that these periods of frequency of sunspots are coincident with the periods of greatest magnetic disturbance on our own globe. Accordingly, we see that there exists a distinct and close connection between variations in the appearance of the sun, and changes in the physical constitution of our earth.

The interesting question now arises: What are the sunspots? and what is their cause? The very careful investigations carried on at Kew Observatory for some years by Messrs. De La Rue, Stewart, and Loewy, have thrown much light upon this interesting subject.

One of the most remarkable features of the spots is, that their central portion is darker than the edge; and accordingly, nearly a century ago, Alexander Wilson, of Glasgow, had suggested that they were pits in an envelope which surrounded the sun. The results of the Kew experiments seem to confirm this idea. They further go to show that the faculæ, or bright patches, are really of the nature of luminous clouds, placed, relatively to the sun, above the level of the spots. These faculæ are generally seen behind the spot, a position which they would necessarily assume if they were thrown up to a greater distance from his centre, and, would move more slowly. The same observers have shown that spots are produced below the level of the sun's photosphere, while the faculæ are suspended in that medium. If this be admitted, it seems to follow that the two phenomena are effects of a vertical circulation in the gaseous matter surrounding the sun, the faculæ being produced when a portion somewhat denser than the medium in which it is suspended is raised into or above the photosphere, while spots are observed when such a mass is below the photospheric stratum. In fact, Mr. Lockyer, one of our most diligent sun observers, has seen a faculæ, apparently in the act of sinking, lose its brightness and gradually pass into a spot, its form remaining unchanged during the process.

The labors of Messrs. De La Rue and Stewart have thrown some light on the possible causes of the vertical circulation in the solar atmosphere. We have already alluded to the ten-yearly periods of frequency of the spots. These gentlemen have discovered that there is a shorter period of twenty months' duration observable in the recurrence of spots, and that this coincides with the periods of recurrence of the same realitive positions of Venus as regards the sun and the earth. A similar relation between Jupiter and the sun is also indicated. These discoveries are of the very greatest interest, as they show us how intimately all the bodies of our solar system are related to each other, and how the slightest change in any one of them exerts a definite influence on the condition of the entire system, despite the great magnitude and the distance from each other of the bodies which compose it.

Whale-Killing With Bombs.

The dangerous adventures of whale ships have been from time immemorial a source of excitement to the juvenile literary mind from the fact that the slaughter and capture of the "monarch of the deep" has, until within a few years, been attended with dangers and hardships which were only braved by the hardest and most courageous of the followers of the sea; but the inventive genius of man has of late years discovered a system for the capture of the whale which is attended with as little danger as an ordinary yachting cruise or fishing excursion. A small steamer known as the Daisy Whitelaw, built for the purpose of killing whales in the waters contiguous to our harbor, has for some time been successfully engaged in the capture of these mammoth inhabitants of the sea, and in several voyages has never failed to kill from one to three of these gigantic animals. Instead of the time-honored and not always effective harpoon, a weapon known as the bomb-ricket is used, which is fired from a mortar and explodes within the body of the whale, killing it almost instantly. The large finback whale recently on exhibition at the foot of Second street was killed by the gun of this steamer. The whales abound in large numbers at this season of the year between the Heads and the Farallone Islands. The varieties indigenous to these waters are the finback, hunchback, California gray and sulphur bottom. The latter is the largest of the whale species, and one 150 feet long was chased by the Whitelaw for several hours, on her last trip, but owing to the fact that it was looking for feed and very erratic in its movements the gun could not be brought to bear on him. Under ordinary circumstances an old whaler can determine the course of a whale when it disappears under water, and can tell within a few feet where it will come up to "blow," but when the whale is looking for food its course under the water cannot be calculated with any degree of certainty.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Glucose.

"Glucose" is from the Greek word glukus, signifying "sweet." It is a constituent of the juice of grapes, plums, cherries, figs and many of the other sweet fruits, and is often seen crystalized on dried figs, raisins, etc. It is also formed from starch, and cellulose or woody fiber. A common name for it is "grape" or "starch" sugar. Most glucose works at the present time manufacture their product from corn, which is largely composed of starch. The modus operandi is very simple. A mixture of starch and water [illegible] of about 120 degrees is made to flow gradually into a vat containing water acidulated with 1 per cent of sulphuric acid, and kept at the boiling point. In about half an hour the starch is converted into sugar. The liquid is drawn off, and the sulphuric acid is neutralized by the gradual addition of chalk, till there is no longer any effervescence. The sulphate of lime is deposited, and the clear aqueous solution, after being concentrated by evaporation, is set aside to crystalize. The molasses is drained off, and the sugar is dried at a gentle heat in a current of air. Glucose is less sweet than cane sugar and, less soluble in water. It is used in the manufacture of beer and alcohol and also for adulterating cane sugar. All alcoholic drinks are obtained from fluids containing this variety of sugar as the essential constituent.

American Locomotives.

The Railroad Gazette says: "It has so long been the fashion in this country to assume and assert the superiority of American locomotives over those of all the rest of the world, that it will, perhaps, excite a ripple, or maybe a storm, of animadversion, to admit frankly that in construction of boilers our European competitors often excel us. This fact is sometimes acknowledged by American mechanical engineers who visit Europe and see the work done there, and is generally indicated by the descriptions and specifications of boilers which come to us through the engineering literature from the other side of the Atlantic." Our cotemporary then describes, at length, the boilers of some engines designed by Mr. Massey Bromley for the Great Eastern railway, and concludes by saying: "Altogether the construction of this boiler has much that American engineers could imitate to advantage, and as was said in the beginning of this article, is in many respects superior to our own practice."

POSITIVELY CURED BY

Benson's Capcine Porous Plasters.

Reasons Why they are Preferred to All Other Porous Plasters or External Remedies!

First.

Because they possess all the merit of the strengthening porous plaster, and contain in addition thereto the newly discovered powerful and active vegetable combination which acts with increased rubefacient, stimulating, sedative and counter irritant effects.

Second.

Because they are a genuine pharmaceutical preparation, and so recognized by the profession.

Third.

Because they are the only plasters that relieve pain at once.

Fourth.

Because they will positively cure diseases which other remedies will not even relieve.

Fifth.

Because over 5000 physicians and druggists have voluntarily testified that they are superior to all other plasters or medicines for external use.

Sixth.

Because the manufacturers have received the only medals ever given for porous plasters.

Money for a Rainy Day.

"For six years my daughter was sick from kidney and other disorders. We had used up our savings on doctors, when our dominie advised us to try Parker's Ginger Tonic. Four bottles effected a cure, and as a dollar's worth has kept our family well over a year, we have been able to lay by money again for a rainy day."—A Poor Man's Wife.

A thoroughly fashionable girl, writes a Long Branch correspondent, as represented at this capital of frivolity, looks as if she had just stepped out of a picture painted in the middle of the last century. She droops her shoulders, represses her bosom and humps her back until she is interestingly shaped like a consumptive in the stages next preceding death. Her shoulder blades show like rudimentary wings through the thin muslin of her white dress, and her toilet is arranged with the utmost simplicity. Over her shoulders is a fichu like the neckerchief familiar in the standard portrait of Martha Washington. Her skirt is gathered at the waist, and hangs as straight and plain as any old-fashioned petticoat to within six inches of the ground. The only suggestion of modern earthliness is the glimpse of gay stockings underneath.

Nevada's Natural Phenomena.

Nevada is a land of curious natural phenomena. Her rivers have no visible outlet to the ocean. She has no lakes of any magnitude. She has vast stretches of alkali deserts, however, that give every indication of having been the beds or bottoms of either seas or lakes. Down in Lincoln county there is a spring of ice-cold water that bubbles up over a rock and disappears on the other side, and no one has been able to find where the water goes. At another point in the same county is a large spring, about twenty feet square, that is apparently only some eighteen or twenty inches in depth, with a sandy bottom. The sand can be plainly seen, but on looking closer it is perceived that this sand is in a perpetual state of unrest. No bottom has ever been found to this spring. It is said that a teamster, on reaching this spring one day, deceived by its apparent shallowness, concluded to soak one of his wagon wheels to cure the looseness of its tire. He therefore took it off and rolled it into the, as he thought, shallow water. He never laid eyes on that wheel again. Her mountains are full of caves and caverns, many of which have been explored to a great distance. Speaking of caves, a rodeo was held last spring over in Huntington valley. During its progress quite a number of cattle were missed and for a time unavailing search was made for them. At last they were traced to the mouth of a natural tunnel or cave in the mountain. The herders entered the cave, and following it for a long distance, at last found the cattle. It appears that they had probably entered the cave, which was very narrow in search of water. It had finally narrowed so that they could proceed no further. Neither could they turn around to get out. They had been missed some days, and if they had not been found must inevitably have perished in a short time. As it was they were extracted from their predicament with difficulty, by the herders squeezing past and getting in front of them and scaring them into a retrograde movement by flapping their hats into the faces of the stupid bovines.—Eureka Leader.

"Cramming" in Education.

One of the worst features in our educational system, and one to which attention has been directed of late, is that of cramming pupils in their studies, either to enable them to pass well at public examinations, or to pass the necessary examinations to admit them into schools of a higher grade from those next lower. The evil is great in itself, and made more by reason of the season when the heat of summer relaxes the system, and when it can least bear extra strain. Teachers and pupils alike are made to suffer from this evil, and we here desire to utter our strong protest against it, and to warn teachers and all interested, to put forth their strongest exertions to do away with it entirely. In laying out the work for the year before you, so arrange your course of study that the least amount of work shall be required of your pupils in the closing weeks of the school year. More good work can be done, and more lasting benefit can be received from a reform in this particular, than from any one measure that can be adopted in school work. Make your pupils thorough in the work they do, but do not cram knowledge—no, not knowledge, but verbiage—into them. "Slow and sure" is a better motto to report at the end of the year than "so much work done," withno permanent result, but injury, to show for it.—Western Educational Journal.

A Wasp's Strategy.

Seth Green, the fish-breeder, tells the following story of a wasp's strategy. He says one morning when he was watching a spider's nest, a wasp alighted within an inch or two of the nest, on the side opposite the opening. Creeping noiselessly around towards the entrance of the nest, the wasp stopped a little short of it, and for a moment remained perfectly quiet on her web.

Then reaching out one of his attennæ, he wiggled it before the opening and withdrew it. This overture had the desired effect, for the boss of the nest, as large a spider as one ordinarily sees, came out to see what new victim he had caught.

No sooner had the spider emerged to that point at which he was at worst disadvantage, than the wasp, with a quick movement, thrust its sting into the body of his foe, killing him easily and almost instantly.

The experiment was repeated on the part of the wasp, and when there was no response from the inside, he became satisfied, probably that he held the fort. At all events, he proceeded to enter the nest and slaughter the young spiders, who were afterwards lugged off one at a time.

Farm Notes.

Corn is excellent food for horses to work on, but not for fast driving. As soon as a horse gets used to eating corn there is no danger of its producing any internal disarrangements. Three or four ears of flint corn are all it should have to begin a diet of this food.

Muck is cooling to the soil in summer, and warming in the winter; it collects moisture and retains it; it acerates the earth, is a reservoir of ammonia and other elements of plant food, not the least of which are its crumbling shells and fragments of petrifications.

Gas lime, when it can be obtained for the trouble of drawing it away, is worth all it costs. It should not be used fresh, but put in heaps ready for spreading on the land in the spring. In a few months the injurious gases escape, and it becomes a mixture of various compounds of lime.

How Tastes Differ.

The tastes of neighboring nations. The Germans and the English esteem the goose almost as highly as the turkey. But in France the former is looked upon as a vulgar bird, unfit to set before epicures. An English journal, writing of the change of taste with respect to eating birds, says:

"To-day we never see a poulterer's shop adorned with rows of peacocks, and should one of these beautiful birds appear upon the table at some grand public or private dinner, none of the guests would go into ecstacies over the dish, as if its delicacy was a fact universally known. But at Rome, no banquet was complete without the presence of a peacock. Among the other large birds the cranes, the swans and even the ostrich were held in high esteem. Geese were also highly prized, and they were eaten not with a sauce, but stuffed with small green apples. The duck and teal were served with the juice of the orange and not that of the lemon; and they were preferred to the heathcock and woodcock. As for larks and thrushes they were usually eaten at the end of a meal, with the idea that it would prove a sovereign remedy against affections of the bowels. But the bird most in esteem with the subjects of the Cæsars was the common thrush. These birds were raised and fatted in large establishments near Rome and brought very high prices. The artificial rearing of these birds, which are excellent for the table, would prove an easy matter."

Another Dig at Women.

Out of a five minute's call a woman will gather inspiration for a good hour's speech when she gets home. She will tell her husband—who is so interested, you know—that Mrs. Stuck-up has "new furniture the second time within three years, if I am not mistaken, and lace curtains with lambrequins and her black silk dress made over and her hair done up in a new way higher than she used to wear it not becoming a bit and her little girl's got her hair banged and all dressed in white and is going to Miss Giddigurl's school in the fall and her cook's gone off mad and she says she's almost tired to death and is going to Swampscott next week and Miss Flirt is going to have Young Spoodlington after all and Miss Smith's going to give her a pair of boquet holders she says they've good enough for her she got them cheap up to Ragshop's and Mrs. Ferguson's got a boy lots of hair on its head and looks three months old every one says and Steve Beaker's awful dissipated they say and that Lovewell girl's father's ordered him out of the house and she's taking on awfully and declares she will have him and the Sigginses have moved out of town and the Browns have lost everything and Mrs. Smith's bought a whole piece of cotton cloth and—" By this time the husband is asleep or has fled. A man could never make so much out of a week's visit. All he would remember would be that Brown's got a pretty wife, or kept good cigars, or some other equally inconsequential matter.—Boston Transcript.

AN OBJECT OF PITY.—Hans Growyoet, a worthy German farmer, who has been a life-long resident of Berks county, has a shrewish wife, who has long rendered his domestic life anything but a couch of roses. One day not long ago she, in a fit of pique, packed up her duds and left him, vowing never to come back. The news went around among the neighbors—you know how intelligence of all kinds does travel in the country—and at night several of them, of whom I was one, went to condole with Hans. He sat on his front stoop, puffing away at his pipe. "Hans," I remarked, "I pity you." "My poy," replied the honest Dutchman, as he disturbedly knocked out the ashes of his pipe, "you vas right. She vas come back!"—Chester (Pa.) Democrat.

The Distinguishing Charm.

THE LOBSTER—The lobster, like the crab, sheds its shelly covering frequently, and previous to the change appears sick and languid, and lays about in a semi-torpid state. The new shell is developed in three or four days, during which time the creature, naked and soft, awaits, in some sheltered hole and corner, the growth of its new shell. How it contrives to draw the muscles of its claws out of their hard shelly covering it is somewhat difficult to understand; but it seems that during its sickly state the limb so contracts that it is capable of being withdrawn through the joints the narrow passages near the body. It changes its shell every six weeks during the first year of its age, in the second year every two months, and afterward about once every three months, until, at some age not known, the moulting process stops, because the animal ceases to grow.

Mother Died of Salt Rheum.

J. W. Adams, Newark, Ohio, says: "Cuticura Remedies are the greatest medicines on earth, Had the worst case of Salt Rheum in this country.—My mother had it twenty years, and in fact died from it. I believe Cuticura would have saved her life. My arms, breast and head were covered for three years, which nothing relieved or cured until I used the Cuticura Remedies.

PILES! PILES!! PILES!!!

A Sure Cure Found at Last. No One Need Suffer.

A sure cure for the Blind, Bleeding, Itching and Ulcerated Piles has been discovered by Dr. Williams (an Indian remedy), called Dr. Williams' Indian Ointment. A single box has cured the worst chronic cases of 25 and 30 years standing. No one need suffer five minutes after applying this wonderful soothing medicine. Lotions, Instruments, and Electuaries do more harm than good. Williams' Ointment absorbs the tumors, allays the intense itching (particularly at night after getting warm in bed), acts as a poultice, gives instant and painless relief, and is prepared only for Piles, itching of the private parts, and nothing else.

Read what the Hon. J. M. Coffinberry, of Cleveland, says about Dr. Williams' Indian Pile Ointment: "I have used scores of pile cures, but it affords me pleasure to say that I have never found anything which gave such immediate and permanent relief as Dr. Williams' Indian Ointment."

ARTHURS' HOME MAGAZINE.

A NEW YEAR —WITH— New and Increased Attractions!

The Home Magazine occupies, and has always occupied a field especially its own. While gathering for its pages from the whole range of general literature, the editor and his efficient co-laborers exercise the most careful discrimination in regard to quality and influence. Nothing is admitted which, in their view, can give false ideas of life, or weaken the bonds of virtue. No matter what may be the reputation, nor how brilliant the talents of the writer, if his moral teachings are at all questionable, they can not find a place in our magazine.—And beyond this, its publishers claim that in its peculiar character and varied departments it is more thoroughly identified with the people in their every-day life and home and social interests than any other first-class periodical.

The Home Magazine for 1882 will be the most interesting and attractive that has yet appeared.

WHAT OUR SUBSCRIBERS SAY.

"The day on which the Home Magazine comes is hailed every month with joy, not only by myself, but the whole family. It is like the face of an old friend."

"I cannot send off this letter without saying how pleased we are with the Home Magazine. We find it next to impossible to do without it."

At Bellefontaine, O., a funeral from the country, passing through town, stopped in front of a photograph gallery, had the corpse carried in and "its picture taken." The hearse was then photographed, and the cortege moved on.

Rev. Richard H. Cain, a bishop in the African M. E. church, was recently traveling with his wife on a Texas railroad, and they sought admittance into a first-class car. The conductor ordered them into the smoker, and Bishop Cain now sues the road for $20,000 compensation for the indignity.

"Oh, by the way, dear, have you congratulated Lily on her engagement?" asked Miss Flouncer of her friend. "Oh, yes; of course. I went round to see her yesterday afternoon. I told her she couldn't have done better—and I don't think she could, the horrid, homely thing."

The sea serpent has been seen again, this time by two gentlemen of San Diego, Cal., who aver that they were duly sober, and saw an enormous snake thrust its head out of the water near shore and swim seaward, toward Point Limia. About twenty feet of its body could be seen above the water. Its body was about three feet in girth.

After an examination of more than 18,000 persons by the London Ophthalmological society, its secretary publishes some curious information about color blindness. One of the most singular facts recorded is that this defect in vision is far more common among men than among women, the exact percentage being respectively 4.16 and 0.4.

There is a large field of grain near the town of Williams, Cal., which is kept fed off completely to the ground by ducks, and no one ever saw a duck upon it. They come on dark nights. Great numbers of them come about 11 o'clock and go away about 4 o'clock in the morning, feeding some four or five hours.

The Toronto World rather throws cold water on the idea that Manitoba is a paradise for poor mechanics. It costs a man $12 a week to board at Winnipeg, and the board is bad at that. Over one thousand mechanics and carpenters are reported to be working in that city for less than living expenses.

WHAT THE NEWSPAPERS SAY.

Mrs. Toodles Outdone.

Chicago Tribune: There is an idea among the "306" that a brass medal, like Mrs. Toodles' door plate, will be a handy thing to have in the house during the present administration.

Keeping the President Busy.

Should Rise and Explain.

Cincinnati Star: General Hancock offered to surrender Mason to the civil authorities for trial, but District Attorney Corkhill held that he must be tried by court-martial. Corkhill should rise and explain. Trial by a military tribunal is always objectionable in time of peace when it can be avoided.

What It Proposes to Do.

Buffalo Express: Civil service reform proposes to deprive high officials of power to pay off their political debts at public expense and to free the people of the need of bowing the knee to such officials in order to secure public employment. It hopes thus to free the people and to purify the government, but not to weaken the political freedom or power of either.

A Fatal Oversight.

Philadelphia Times: The articles of partnership between Governor Cornell and John Kelly fail to specify which shall be senior and which the junior partner in the political firm.—This is a fatal oversight. It would be just like Kelly to insist on assuming to be head of the firm, and that might cause trouble in the camp. A compromise can be effected, however, by a mutual agreement that Cornell shall sign the checks and Kelly pocket the profits.

A Truthful Observation.

Philadelphia Times: Uncle Samuel's right hand has not forgot its cunning in the composition of vigorous Democratic letters. There would be no mistaking the authorship of the epistle to the Iroquois Club even were the familiar name not signed to it. The writer might be known, if by nothing else, by the aspiration that Providence may raise up a man to reform the government from the inside and that "the people will put him in possession of the Executive administration."

A Very Thin Statesman.

T. S. Applegate in Adrian Times: A very thin statesman is Senator Mahone, of Virginia. I shook hands with him the other day. If you can fancy a skeleton habited in a close-fitting coat and nineteenth century pantaloons, with long hair and "beard like the Pard," you have an idea of Mahone. I restrained from shaking his hand hard for it really seemed as if a good hearty shake would result in the frail articulation of the skeleton giving away, and the figure becoming a bunch of bones at my feet.

Unprotected Labor.

Detroit Evening News: Labor, skilled and unskilled, is making efforts all over the country to obtain a share of the big profits which the present general prosperity is giving to enterprise. Demands for increased wages are being made in every center of industry from New York to Omaha. But the monopolies, which are able by the power of the general government to crush out all competition and to secure the markets of fifty millions for themselves, are not eager to respond to these demands. In the mines of Pennsylvania, where miners have to rent tariff protected houses from their employers, and buy tariff protected groceries at the company stores, and dig out tariff protected coal with which no foreign pauper coal is allowed to compete, and where they get from $18 to $25 per month for their labor, they are coolly informed that if they do not like the wages there are thousands to take their places.

Sensible Advice from a Friend.

Henry Watterson to the Iroquois Club: First of all, then, the Democratic Press must realize that there has been a deluge. Old things have been swept away. He who looks backward shall share the fate of Lot's wife; he alone who looks forward shall live, move and have a being. That the Democratic party has survived the deluge is of good augury. It tells us that its existence has been prolonged for some great purpose. It is for the Democratic Press to understand that within that purpose are bound up no reactions and no revenges. The Democratic party cannot come into power, and it ought not to come into power, as an avenging deity, still less a destroying angel. It must come in, of it, come in at all, as the party of action, not reaction; the party of reform, not redress; the party of to-day, not of yesterday, applying its energies to the adjustment of the country and itself to the new and extraordinary conditions which modern science, invention and research have wrought wherever the tinkle of the telephone is heard and the sparkle of the electric light is seen.

AN UNUSUAL FURORE.

A Recent Excitement Investigated by the Herald and the Results Made Public.

(Cleveland, O., Herald)

A few weeks ago we copied into our columns from the Rochester, N. Y., Democrat and Chronicle, "A Remarkable statement," made by J. B. Henion, M. D., a gentleman who is well known in this city. In that article Dr. Henion recounted a wonderful experience which befell him, and a few days thereafter we published from the same paper a second article giving an account of the "Excitement in Rochester," caused by Dr. Henion's statement. In the first article Dr. Henion stated that for a number of years, up to last June, he had been afflicted with what seemed at first a most mysterious trouble. He felt unaccountably tired at frequent intervals; he had dull and indefinite pains in various parts of his body and head, and was very hungry one day and entirely without appetite the next. However, as a physician he thought, and so did his fellow physicians, that he was suffering from malaria.

But yet he grew worse, and was finally obliged to give up a large and lucrative practice. Still he was not conscious of his danger, nor that a monstrous disease was becoming fixed upon him, although all his organs had become gradually weakened. The symptoms above described continued, accompanied by others of an aggravated nature, and he noticed a peculiar color and odor about the fluids he was passing; that they were abundant one day and very scanty the next, and were covered with froth, or filled with brick dust sediment. But even then he did not realize his real and alarming condition. At last however he was brought face to face with the fact that he was a victim of a most terrible disease, and he made heroic efforts for recovery. He traveled extensively and consulted the best physicians, but they could give him only temporary relief, and that principally in the form of morphine. And so he grew steadily and constantly worse until his life became a torture. His pulse was uncontrollable. He lived wholly by injections, and for six days and nights he had the hiccoughs constantly, which are considered the sure indications of coming death.

When hope and life were nearly exhausted, his pastor, the Rev. Dr. Foote, rector of St. Paul's church, strongly urged him to try a means which the reverend gentleman had seen used with remarkable results. He objected at first, but finally consented, and was conscious of an improved condition the first week. His pains gradually disappeared; his stomach resumed digestion; his heart became regular; his headache disappeared; he had no more chills and fever, or acidity of the stomach; he gained twenty-six pounds in three months, and is a well man to-day, being entirely cured of a most pronounced case of Bright's disease.

Although conscious of the consequences from his professional brethren, still as a duty to his fellow men, and according to a vow he had made on what he thought was his dying bed, he published a card detailing his illness and remarkable cure. "Since my recovery," he says, "I have thoroughly re-investigated the subject of kidney difficulties and Bright's disease, and I believe more than one-half the deaths which occur in America are caused by Bright's disease of the kidneys. It has no distinctive symptoms of its own (indeed, it often develops without any pain whatever in the kidneys or their vicinity, but has the symptoms of nearly every other known complaint. Hundreds of people die daily whose burials are authorised by a physician's certificate of "Heart Disease," "Apoplexy," "Paralysis," "Spinal Complaint," Rheumatism," "Pneumonia," or other common complaints when in reality it was Bright's disease of the kidneys. Few physicians, and fewer people, realize the extent of this disease or its dangerous and insiduous nature. It steals into the system like a thief, manifest its presence by the commonest symptoms, and fastens itself upon the life before the victim is aware. It is nearly as hereditary as consumption, quite as common and fully as fatal. Entire families, inheriting it from their ancestors, have died, and yet none of the number knew or realized the mysterious power which was removing them. Instead of common symptoms it often shows none whatever, but brings death suddenly and as such is usually supposed to be heart disease."

The second article entitled, "Excitement in Rochester," was made up of interviews with Dr. Henion himself, who confirmed all said in his card, and also with Mr. H. H. Warner. The latter gentleman did not regard Dr. Henion's case as particularly exceptional, because he had known of very many such cures by the same means in all parts of the land. Kidney diseases, he said, are carrying off tens of thousands every year, while Bright's disease is increasing 250 per cent a decade, and yet the people do not realize it or seek to check it until too late. He related how a New Orleans medical professor, lecturing on this disease, thinking to show his class what healthy fluids were subjected some of his own to a chemical test, and although he had no suspicion of it before, discovered that he, too, had the dreaded disease, which proved fatal in less than a year. There was also an interview with the celebrated chemist of the New York State board of Health, Dr. S. A. Lattimore, who said he had analyzed the remedy which cured Dr. Henion, and found that it was "entirely free from any poisonous or deleterious substance."

We have made these condensations in order that all the material facts may be set before our readers. Since the publication of these two articles, having been besieged with letters of inquiry, we sent a communication to Dr. Henion and also sent one to H. H. Warner & Co., asking if any additional proof could be given us as to the validity of the statements published. In answer thereto we have received the following letters, which add interest to the entire subject, and wholly verify every statement hitherto made:

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Feb. 2, 1882.

GENTLEMEN: Your favor is received. The published statement, over my signature, to which you refer is true in every respect, and I owe my life and present health wholly to the power of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure. It is not surprising that people should question the statement I made, for my recovery was as great a marvel to myself, as to my physicians and friends.

J. B. HENION, M. D.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Jan. 31, 1882.

SIRS: Acknowledging your favor duly received, we would say: The best proof we can give you that the statements made by Dr. Henion are entirely true, and would not have been published unless strictly so, is the following testimonial from the best citizens of Rochester, and a card published by Rev. Dr. Foote, which you are at liberty to use if you wish.

H. H. WARNER & Co.

To whom it may concern:

In the Rochester, N. Y., Democrat and Chronicle of December 31, 1881, there appeared a statement in the form of a card from Dr. J. B. Henion, of this city, recounting his remarkable recovery from Bright's disease of the kidneys, after several doctors of prominence had given him up, by the use of a preparation manufactured in this city and known as Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure.

We are personally or by reputation acquainted with Dr. Henion, and we believe he would publish no statement not literally true. We are also personally or by reputation well acquainted with H. H. Warner & Co., proprietors of this remedy whose commercial and personal standing in this community is of the highest order, and we believe that they would not publish any statements which were not literally and strictly true in every particular.

Charles E. Fitch, (Editor Democrat and Chronicle and Regent of the University.)

To the Editor of the Living Church, Chicago, Ill.

Will you allow the following card, personal to myself, to appear in your widely circulated paper?

There was published in the Rochester Democrat and Chronicle of the 31st of Dec. last, a statement made by J. B. Henion, M. D., narrating how he had been cured by Bright's disease of the kidneys, almost in its last stages, by the use of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure. I was referred to in that statement, as having recommended and urged Dr. Henion to try the remedy, which he did, and was cured.

Now the republishing of his statement in many of the leading journals of the day has been the cause of an incessant flow of letters to me making many inquiries, but chiefly whether the statement is true or a mere advertising dodge, etc.

I beg, therefore to anticipate any further inquiries and save time and labor, and some postage, by saying that the statement of Dr. Henion is true in all other respects. He is a parishioner of mine and I visited him in his sickness. I urged him to take the medicine and would do the same again to any one who was troubled with a disease of the kidneys and liver.

HARVESTING MACHINES
Take the Lead.

In 1853, 500 Machines were sold.
In 1881, 40,413 were sold, and
47,000 have been ordered for 1882.

But the NE PLUS ULTRA of Harvesting Machinery is the Wood Twine Binder. This machine was first put upon the market in 1880, and 4,184 machines were sold that year. In 1881, the sales swelled to 10,034, and orders for over 12,000 have already been received for 1882.

THE WOOD TWINE BINDER!

Possesses these special points of excellence:

1—It is the most perfect automatic self binder ever made.
2—It effects a positive separation of the bound from the unbound grain.
3—The sheaf is formed and compressed without any strain on the twine until the knot is tied.
4—The grain is straightened by the action of the packer as it enters the binder.
5—The automatic uniform sizing of the bundle, thus relieving the driver of the care of stopping and starting the binder.

Last year's machines proved such a perfect success that they will be built substantially the same for 1882, with such improvements in minor details as may be found necessary.

Every farmer desiring to buy a self binder should examine the Wood Twine Binder before purchasing.

Resignation of Rev. Wm. Grandy.

Rev. Wm. Grandy has resigned his position as pastor of the Presbyterian church, and has accepted a call to Fremont, Nebraska. His relations with his church here and the community in general have been of a very friendly character, and his only reason for making the change is to seek a change of climate, his family having been seriously afflicted for severa months with climatic difficulties. Mr. Grandy is well liked as a clergyman and a citizen and his family are highly respected here. His departure will cause sincere regret. We hope he may find a congenial home among as warm friends as he has left behind, and we can assure the church in Fremont that they have secured the services of a fine minister and a thorough christian gentleman.

Adrian Record: So Navin is in Denver, eh? Tom always claimed that John Wellman got the better of the "Lung Pad Company" whereby he, Tom, was the sufferer to the extent of $500. More than likely Tom, hearing Johnny is "well heeled" went out there to settle up. O yes! of course he is in Denver.

THE American Agriculturalist for April, is of special value for the opening spring and summer work. They will be assisted by Prof. Rupp, of Adrian, and other foreign talent, as well as the best musical talent of Tecumseh. Extensive preparations are making to render this a very superior concert.

WE have received from the publishers a copy of the Hand-book of Mormonism. It is a concise and very readable exhibit of the Mormon problem, as it now stands in Utah. Adrian Record: Something over two weeks ago, a member of a hat renovating firm, called on County Treasurer Cochrane, and wanted to repair up his old head gear. George turned over to the solicitor all his various head paraphernalia, from the sleek Sunday hat, slightly soiled, down to the superanuated old hat of small pretention, reserving only a light, well ventilated summer article, which he judged would do for a day or two. The days expanded into a week and the week doubled, but nary a hat came back. Then Mr. Cochrane, who had begun to grow slightly irreligious with staying at home Sundays, showed symptoms of uneasiness and began to make inquiries. He found that the hat renovator left the city about two weeks before.

THOS. ADAMSON has in his possession a watch made in about 1840, in Liverpool, by Thos. Adamson, Sr., for A. Gillett, master of the ship William Tell. Some years later he sold it to Thos. Brown, of Sag Harbor, Long Island, who presented it to his clerk, Wm. Tooker, for honorable attention to duty. The watch is a plain gold one of old style, and has kept the best of time for over 40 years. For some time Thos. Adamson of this place has been trying to get possession of this watch, made by his father, and has finally secured it at quite a large expense.

A New Man—Dyspepsia Cured.

From the Hon. J. H. Benson, Hart Co., Ga. Hartwell, Ga., Feb. 10, 1881. I want to say a good word for Brown's Iron Bitters. I am about sixty years of age; have warehouse, railroad and newspaper work to do. I have been taking——and various other kinds of whiskey bitters to give me an appetite, and the only appetite I got was one for drink. Rev. Mr. Anderson, the presiding elder for the district, stopped with me not long ago, suffering dreadfully from dyspepsia. I got him Brown's Iron Bitters. They cured him. After he left, I concluded to take that remaining in the bottle, and I assure you it has made a new man out of me. I have no desire for stimulants, and believe I could eat a pair of old boots and digest them as easily as I do rice. J. B. Benson.

The exercises of the week will exhibit the daily work of the several departments, except that all topics discussed will be review.

Tuesday and Wednesday, March 28, 29, examinations in the central building. Thursday and Friday, March 30, 31, examinations in the branch buildings.

The order of recitations in the high school, for each day, Tuesday and Wednesday, is as follows:

FORENOON.

First Hour—Virgil, Complete Algebra, Science of Arithmetic.
Second Hour—Cæsar, Geometry.
Third Hour—English History, General History, Natural Philosophy.
Fourth Hour—Introductory Algebra, Advanced German, United States History.

AFTERNOON.

First Hour—Rhetoric, English Literature.
Second Hour—Latin Lessons, First year German, Rhetoricals.
Third Hour—Cicero, Botany, Chemistry.

Classes in the High School change every forty or forty-five minutes; rhetoricals continue fifteen minutes. In the lower departments changes are more frequent. Those visiting the schools for a short time only are thus enabled to see a variety of work.

It is earnestly hoped that the citizens of Tecumseh will manifest their great interest in the schools by their attendance, during so much of the time as is possible, upon the examinations.

All the examinations will be conducted orally or by means of blackboard work so that all may hear or see.

HOLSTEIN CATTLE.

The breed of cattle known as the Holstein, which are imported from the Netherlands, are coming in great favor wherever they are known. Not only for their large size, hardy and vigorous constitution, but also for their enormous yield of milk of the very best quality.

The Stock Journal in speaking of the Holsteins as a dairy cattle says:

"[illegible] viz: annual yield of rich milk, adapted to the wants of a general dairy, for quantity and quality of cheese; power of assimilating food; hardy constitution; purity of blood; and prepotency or power to transmit the characteristics on their grade offspring, and rank equal to other large breeds for a profitable production of beef on ordinary keeping, and a full average for butter.

On this last point I have recently received some very satisfactory reports from different herds which prove all that has ever been claimed for them. Four to four and a half pounds of butter for one hundred pounds of milk seems to be no uncommon result, and this has been done at Elgin with half blood heifers, 2 years old, giving sixteen quarts a day. Reports from different herds of full bloods show a yield of from ten to fifteen pounds per week of butter of superior quality.

It is beyond question that more points can be scored for Holsteins for the use of our Northwestern dairymen than for any other breed. Let us hope that the question of breeds will receive more attention, for it is readily admitted that more depends upon our cows to show a balance on the right side of our accounts than upon any other item in the whole dairy business.

It is not only to the milk product of the Holstein that she owes her reputation. She takes high rank among the beef producers. Englishman boast of their beef without telling us that a very large share comes from Holland, Belgium, Holstein and Denmark. If any one doubts this, let them look over the London reports of Smithfield and Detford, and see where the cattle are from.

In the dairy districts around Elgin Ills., half blood Holstein heifers and cows bring nearly or quite double the price of any other grades, and in fact many of the largest dairymen will not have anything else, and grade Holstein steers, two or three years old, bring from fifteen to twenty dollars more for feeding than any others.

In answer to the demand for this breed of cattle, Mr. A. P. Coddington has just purchased one of the finest herds in the State, headed by the splendid imported bull "Lord LeBaron," H. H. Book. No. 528. We do not believe his superior can be found anywhere. It is well worth a visit to Mr. C's farm to see him alone. The cows and heifers are all perfect beauties, and are all imported, and were selected with the greatest care by Mr. C., from one of the largest imported herds in the United States, and were the finest and best that could be purchased.

We congratulate our farmers on this opportunity to improve their stock.—They should not be slow to avail themselves of it and encourage such enterprise. Let Tecumseh become as famous for its fine cattle, its superior beef and its abundance of splendid butter as it now is for its wheat and flour.

WIDOW BEDOTT.

Read the following testimonials of "Widow Bedott Company" which is to be at the Opera House on Tuesday evening next:

It can be truthfully said that there was never an audience in Martin hall more highly delighted than that of last evening, the occasion being the first presentation in this city of the farcial comedy, "Widow Bedott." From the rising of the curtain in the first act to its going down in the last, the house shook with continual roars of laughter.

There was a very fair-sized audience at the opera house last night to see the "Widow Bedott," and they were not disappointed. Miss Coleman, as the gushing widow, is a success, and her support is excellent. We have heard it remarked by a number of competent critics present last night, that Miss Coleman played the part of "Widow Bedott" in a manner superior to any artist who has lately visited this city. The entire absence of anything bordering on vulgarity was certainly a feature which commends her as above some leading artists in that character.—Meadville (Pa.) Republican.

The managers of the opera house furnished the amusement-going public of Salamanca an unusually fine entertainment last evening, which was patronized by a large and appreciative audience. The play was Mr. Frank Wynkoop's dramatization of the celebrated 'Widow Bedott Papers,' presented by Miss Coleman, supported a company of actresses and actors of acknowledged merit. The play abounds in laughable situations and is free from vulgarity.—Cattaraugus (N. Y.) Republican.

DR. CRAM held a policy in the Knights of Honor for $2000, Dr. House being the beneficiary named therein. The two Doctors have been warm personal friends, and Dr. Cram left this testimonial of his friendship.

LEE has moved his old stock of goods into Tupper's former store and henceforth he will pay rent on but one store. The consolidation of two stocks gives him a very large assortment.

The Yard Measure.

Every one is acquainted with the nature and utility of the yard measure. It is the British standard of length, regulating all other measures, and consequently is the foundation of business transactions and professional operations of many different kinds. But its high utility is entirely dependent upon its uniformity and invariable proportions. It would be in the greatest degree inconvenient and unsatisfactory if a yard in one part of the kingdom meant something different to the measure which passed under the same name in another, or if the least variation were found in the yard measures of different parts. Hence it is necessary to have some authoritative standard by which the dimensions of the yard shall be accurately adjusted, and according to which the legality or otherwise of any measurement may be determined.

Many curious particulars are connected with the formation of this authoritative standard of the country; and few persons unacquainted with the facts would have any idea of the interest which thus attaches to so common an object as the yard measure. In our early history disputes often arose in the measurement of cloth, etc., and frauds were frequently committed. To check them Henry I. ordered a standard yard to be made and kept at Winchester, and decreed that it should be of the length of his own arm. This was a rough and ready mode of settling the matter, which presents the greatest contrast to the formation of a standard measure to the present time. The disadvantage attending it was that, in the event of the standard being lost or destroyed, it would be next to impossible to construct another of precisely the same dimensions. To avoid any such difficulty, a scientific basis has been taken in modern times for the formation of the standard yard measure. Plainly stated, this basis is the exact length of the clock pendulum which vibrates seconds of time in the latitude of London. This may appear to some to be a simple rule, by which the standard may be determined with comparative ease; but on the contrary, it is a matter requiring the most minute and accurate research, which only astronomers and mathematicians of the highest attainments are competent to undertake.

Down to the year 1824, the standard yard of the country was a rod which had been deposited in the Court Exchequer in the time of Elizabeth. All measures intended for general use were brought to be examined by an officer of the court placed parallel with the standard, and stamped with certain marks if found correct. Their use for business purposes was thenceforth legal. By an Act of Parliament passed in 1824, this old standard was superseded by another which had been constructed under the auspices of the Royal Society in 1760.

The act provided "The straight line or distance between the centres of the two points in the gold studs in the brass rod, now in the custody of the Clerk of the House of Commons, shall be the original and genuine standard of a yard; and the same straight line, the brass being at the temperature of 62° of Fahrenheit's thermometer, shall be the unit or only standard measure of extension." The provision as to the comparison with the thermometer was founded on the well-known fact of the extension or contraction of metals at different temperatures, and illustrates the nicety with which all circumstances relating to the standard of measure are considered and adjusted.

This standard was destroyed by the fire which consumed the Houses of Parliament in 1834, and a commission was appointed to replace it. It had been previously enacted that "If at any time hereafter the imperial standard yard shall be lost, or in any manner destroyed, defaced, or otherwise injured, it shall be restored by making, under the directions of the Lords of the Treasury, a new standard yard, bearing the proportion to a pendulum, vibrating seconds of mean time, in the latitude of London, in a vacuum, and at the level of the sea, as 36 inches to 39·1393 inches."

The labor of reconstruction in accordance with this enactment was commenced by the celebrated astronomer, Mr. F. Baily. He died in 1844, leaving his researches to be continued by Professor Sheepshanks; and on the death of the latter gentleman in 1855, the work was taken up and completed by the present Astronomer Royal, Mr. G. B. Airy. Nearly a quarter of a century thus elapsed between the destruction of one standard and the completion of another to succeed it.

The new standard yard measure is deposited in the Houses of Parliament, and authenticated copies of it at the Court of Exchequer, the Royal Mint, the Royal Society, and the Royal Observatory at Greenwich.

The French standard measure of length is the metre, which is founded on the measurement of the earth from the pole to the equator in the meridian of Paris. This distance is divided into 10,000,000 equal parts, one of which parts is taken as the unit of length, and called a metre from the Greek metron, a measure.

New York City has more inhabitants than any one of these States: Alabama, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Kansas, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Minnesota, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, Oregon, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Vermont, and West Virginia. Manhattan Island contains more people than Maine and New Hampshire together, with nearly all of Vermont thrown in.

—Rev. Manley Benson, a Canadian minister, has been manly enough to say that he does not approve of tea meetings as a means of raising money for church purposes. The day has gone by, he said, when the stomach should be appealed to in place of the head, and it was about time the fashion of buying articles and giving them to the church, are then paying again to eat them up, ceased to be in vogue.

A Story of Steel Pens.

Few persons who use steel pens on which is stamped "Gillott" have any idea of the story of suffering, of indomitable pluck and persistence, which belong to the placing of that name on this article.

A long depression in trade in England threw thousands of Sheffield mechanics out of work, among them Joseph Gillott, then twenty-one years of age.

He left the city with but a shilling in his pocket. Reaching Birmingham, he went into an inn and sat down upon a wooden settle in the tap-room. His last penny was spent for a roll. He was weak, hungry and ill. He had not a friend in Birmingham; and there was little chance that he would find work.

In his despondency he was tempted to give up, and turn beggar or tramp. Then a sudden fiery energy seized him. He brought his fist down on the table, declaring to himself that he would try and trust in God, come what would. He found work that day in making belt buckles, which were then fashionable.

As soon as he had saved a pound or two, he hired a garret in Bread street, and there carried on work for himself, bringing his taste and knowledge of tools into constant use, even when working at hand-made goods. This was the secret of Gillott's success. Other workmen drudged on passively in the old ruts. He was wide-awake, eager to improve his work, or to shorten the way of working.

He fell in love with a pretty and sensible girl named Mitchell, who with her brothers, was making steel pens. Each pen was then clipped, punched, and polished by hand, add pens were sold consequently at enormously high prices.

Gillott at once brought his skill in tools to bear on the matter, and soon invented a machine which turned the points out by thousands, in the time that a man would require to make one. He married Miss Mitchell, and they carried on the manufacture together for years.

On the morning of his marriage, the industrious young workman made a gross of pens, and sold them for thirty-six dollars to pay the wedding fees. In his old age, having then reaped an enormous fortune by his shrewdness, honesty and industry, Mr. Gillott went again to the old inn, bought the settle, and had the square on which he sat sawed out and made into a chair, which he left as an heirloom to his family, to remind them of the secret of his success.

Does Good Printing Pay?

We do not suppose there is anything that men buy which gives them more genuine satisfaction in its use than good stationery. There is a pleasure in using good stationery, especially in private correspondence, which cannot be obtained by the use of a poor article, however it may be managed. The value of good stationery to business men is rarely appreciated by even those who are in the habit of using it. A letter always creates an impression. Especially is this true when the letter is from a stranger. Accordingly it is well for every one who writes letters to consider what kind of an impression his epistle is likely to create in the mind of the person to whom it is addressed.

The most important element in creating a favorable impression by the letters one writes is in the style and quality of the paper and envelope, the character of the printing forming the letterhead, and the taste displayed in the general arrangement. If the whole be done in a way that indicates taste, a favorable impression is almost invariably made. On the other hand, if the general style of paper and printing be slouchy, an impression quite the opposite of favorable will be created in the minds of the persons addressed. There is nothing which the business man uses in which cheapness is such bad policy as the stationery employed in his correspondence. He may pay his clerks only half salaries, he may descend to all sorts of meanness in his management, and perceive no disastrous results arising from his policy, because no one outside of his own store will know it. Such management cannot be patent to his customers, and therefore can have no effect upon their minds. On the other hand, every one with whom he deals by the medium of correspondence has an opportunity to judge of him by the character of the letters he writes, and will not be slow to form an opinion. A handsomely written letter, upon good letter-paper, having a fine heading, indicating that good taste has been exercised in selecting it, never fails to create a good impression.

Slate-Pencils.

In making slate-pencils, broken slate is put into a mortar run by steam, and pounded into particles. Then it goes into a mill and runs into a "bolting-machine," such as is used in flouring mills, where it is "belted," the fine, almost impalpable, flour that results being taken to a mixing-tub, where a small quantity of steatite flour similarly manufactured, is added, together with other materials, the whole being made into a stiff dough.

This dough is kneaded thoroughly by passing it several times between iron rollers. Thence it is conveyed to a table where it is made into "charges," or short cylinders, four or five inches thick, and containing eight or twelve pounds each. Four of these are placed in a strong iron chamber, or "retort," with a changeable nozzle so as to regulate the size of the pencil, and subjected to tremendous hydraulic pressure, under which the composition is pushed through the nozzle in the shape of a long cord, and passes over a sloping table slit at right angles with the cords to give passage to a knife which cuts them into lengths. They are then laid on boards to dry, and after a few hours are removed to sheets of corrugated zinc, the corrugation serving to prevent the pencils from warping during the process of baking, to which they are next subjected in a kiln, into which superheated steam is introduced in pipes, the temperature being regulated according to the requirements of the article exposed to its influence.

From the kiln the articles go to the finishing and packing-room, where the ends are thrust for a second under rapidly-revolving emery wheels, and withdrawn neatly and smoothly pointed. They are then packed in pasteboard boxes, each containing one hundred each, or ten thousand pencils in a shipping-box. Nearly all the work is done by boys, and the cost therefore is light.

A cloth-proof paper is made from a mixture of woolen, cotton, and hempen waste; it is then saturated with a mixture of crude carbolic acid, heated thin coal tar, and the residual oil from the rectification of naptha. The paper is then pressed and dried, and serves to wrap up articles liable to be damaged by moths.

Love for the dead should not cramp our duty to the living.

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC R'Y

Is The Great Connecting Link between the East and the West!

Its main line runs from Chicago to Council Bluffs, passing through Joliet, Ottawa, La Salle, Geneseo, Moline, Rock Island, Davenport, West Liberty, Iowa City, Marengo, Brooklyn, Grinnell, Des Moines (the capital of Iowa), Stuart, Atlantic, and Avoca; with branches from Bureau Junction to Peoria; Wilton Junction to Muscatine, Washington, Fairfield, Eldon, Belknap, Centreville, Princeton, Trenton, Gallatin, Cameron, Leavenworth, Atchison, and Kansas City; Washington to Sigourney, Oskaloosa, and Knoxville; Keokuk to Farmington, Bonaparte, Bentonsport, Independence, Elton, Ottumwa, Eddyville, Oskaloosa, Pella, Monroe, and Des Moines; Mt. Zion to Keosauqua; Newton to Monroe; Des Moines to Indianola and Winterset; Atlantic to Griswold and Audubon; and Avoca to Harlan and Carson. This is positively the only Railroad, which owns, and operates a through line from Chicago into the State of Kansas.

Through Express Passenger Trains, with Pullman Palace Cars attached, are run each way daily between CHICAGO and PEORIA, KANSAS CITY, COUNCIL BLUFFS, LEAVENWORTH and ATCHISON. Through cars are also run between Milwaukee and Kansas City, via the "Milwaukee and Rock Island Short Line."

What will please you most will be the pleasure of enjoying your meals, while passing over the beautiful prairies of Illinois and Iowa, in one of our magnificent Dining Cars that accompany all Through Express Trains. You get an entire meal, as good as is served in any first-class hotel, for seventy-five cents.

Appreciating the fact that a majority of the people prefer separate apartments for different purposes (and the immense passenger business of this line warranting it), we are pleased to announce that this Company runs Pullman Palace Sleeping Cars for sleeping purposes, and Palace Dining Cars for eating purposes only. One other great feature of our Palace Cars is a SMOKING SALOON where you can enjoy your "Havana" at all hours of the day.

Magnificent Iron Bridges span the Mississippi and Missouri rivers at all points crossed by this line, and transfers are avoided at Council Bluffs, Kansas City, Leavenworth and Atchison, connections being made in Union Depots.

At CHICAGO, with all diverging lines for the East and South.

DR. A. TRASK'S MAGNETIC OINTMENT.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

ALL SORES, CUTS, BRUISES, SPRAINS, BURNS, SORE THROAT, LAMENESS, RHEUMATISM, PILES, INFLAMMATION of LUNGS and BOWELS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, SALT RHEUM, CHILBLAINS, AFFECTIONS of the SPINE, and SCIATICA, NERVOUS IRRITATION and all pains attendant with INFLAMMATION.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates every portion of the human frame; every muscle, vein, nerve, and ligament is searched and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country we simply ask those readers of this notice, who have never used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should feel perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Price 25 and 40 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

Kalamazoo is said to be the most remunerative field in this state for traveling doctors.

The St. Clair city council has passed a resolution to raise $38,975 for paving some of the principal streets in that city.

Miss Jennie Gilchrist, of Stanwood, Mecosta county, being tired of life, tried to kill herself last week. It is thought her injury is fatal.

Miss Belle Reynolds, of Hunter's Creek, Lapeer county, died a few days ago, and the garment which was to have been her wedding dress became her shroud.

About $75,000 will pay off the men who come down to Muskegon from the lumber woods this spring. Much of the money will go to—well, the missionaries won't get it.

The sportsmen of Napoleon have been bagging wild geese and wild pigeons the past two or three weeks.—Pigeons appeared in that quarter in large flocks early in February.

Jacob Rough, father of County Treasurer Geo. W. Rough, of Berrien, and one of the prominent old citizens of that county, died at his home in Bertrand township on the 15th, aged 85 years.

It is announced that an Alpena lady named McDonald, who for 14 years has been unable to speak, suddenly recovered her vocal powers on the 14th inst., and is now able to speak as well as others.

Alexander W. Hamilton, of Ann Arbor, has bought the royalty of the late Prof. J. C. Watson's "Interest, Discount and Investment Tables."—All of the Watson estate is thus now disposed of except the royalty on his book on "Theoretical Astronomy."

There were 6,739,572 gallons of kerosene burned in this state last year, and the only loss of life by it so far as known was that of Mrs. Curtiss, of Lapeer, and even in that case it is not yet clear to all whether she was killed by carelessness, cussedness or kerosene.

A joint stock company has been formed at East Saginaw for the manufacture of axes, saws and other tools. A paid up capital of $50,000 is the basis upon which the company works and the business will be under the supervision of A. F. Dunton, late of Hillsdale. It is expected the works will be in operation June 1.

An esteemed citizen of East Saginaw stepped to his front door last Sunday morning to get his paper.—The wicked carrier had flung it far from the porch and the citizen, clad only in his shirt, looked furitively about and seeing no one in sight made a dash for the newspaper, but the door closed behind him with the night latch spring. As his wife was asleep up stairs, the racket he was compelled to make to arouse her to let him in, also aroused the neighborhood, and that part of the population who witnessed the scene have not yet ceased blushing.

There is on exhibition at the store of Brown & Ward a rare collection of relics, consisting of a large solid silver cross brooch, six small crosses, and a pair of silver earrings, plowed up by John Diffin, of Taymouth, on the Flint river, about seven miles above the bend of the Cass. The word 'Montreal' was plainly discernable on the large cross. The ornaments doubtless were the property of one of the Jesuit priests who visited this section and instructed the Indians a century or more ago, and who may have been buried on or near the spot where the ornaments were found. — Saginaw Courier.

Soon after the verdict of the jury in the celebrated Barnard-Curtis murder trial, which led to the acquittal of Mrs. Barnard, that lady was excluded from membership with the Baptist church at Greenville, without a hearing. A mutual council, called by her husband and the church, met at Greenville on the night of the 15th to consider whether the action was in accordance with church canons, and a long and animated discussion ensued, resulting in a declaration that the exclusion was in accordance with scripture and baptist usage. The baptist churches of Greenville, Kalamazoo, Palo, Ionia, Howell, Portland, Grand Rapids, Rockford and Big Rapids were represented in the council.—Two delegates did not vote at all, and two voted against the majority. The question as to the propriety of Elder Curtis' haste in remarrying was not considered.

The Pocket Handkerchief.

We may forget our purse, our penknife and many other things, says the London Hatter, without experiencing any great inconvenience, and even without its being known at times, but to lose or mislay the handkerchief may be followed by very grave consequences, as we all know. Moreover we make use of this article in many other different ways. All who make use of spectacles do not remove them from their nose in order to put them very carefully into the case without using the handkerchief; they use it again before putting them on, wiping the glasses with great care. The majority of people pay by far too little attention to an object so indispensable. Many put it into the same pocket with their keys, their purse, their snuff box, without troubling themselves concerning the many strange substances with which its tissues will not fail to come in contact in so miscellaneous a company, and which might sully the purity which the handkerchief ought to possess. Does one go to pay a visit? Before presenting themselves to the person they wished to thank or solicit, some have been known to dust their boots with the handkerchief. Does the careful wife see some grains of dust left on her ornaments? She makes them disappear with her handkerchief. Boys in the school room clean their slates with them; in the play-ground the handkerchief is the necessary attendant of a multitude of games. With this they wipe off the dirt; they strike off the dust. It is used to stop the blood that flows from wounds—always very numerous in the age of leapfrog and prisoners' base; the age also of communism in handkerchiefs. With wounds come tears, and the handkerchief, full of dust, spotted with dirt, with the blood of bodies known or unknown, serves again for wiping the eyes, the nose, or the cheeks furrowed with tears. We do not wish, and we cannot tell here, all the strange uses that people make of the pocket handkerchief. And then what signals have been conveyed by it! How many sad farewells, how many cheerful congratulations! The very method of waving it has a language, as the motions of the fan also have. But no one has hitherto discoursed on the language of the pocket handkerchief. And how useful it often is as a help to the pocket or the hand bag! How many mushrooms, myrtle berries, strawberries and raspberries have been gathered into the handkerchief in young days, and more valuable things in latter life! Then there may be evil results traced to it—a number of ailments of which one cannot guess the origin; diseases of the nose and eyes. Fortunate it is for him that incurs nothing worse; diphtheria for example, which the handkerchief may heedlessly transmit. Let us not use the handkerchief except for its proper purpose; let us devote to it a special place; let us change it as often as possible, and inspire our children with disgust for another's handkerchief on account of the disagreeable, nay, dangerous consequences that may ensue. Much more might be said about the pocket handkerchief, but enough has been hinted at to set our readers a-thinking upon its importance, its uses and its abuses.

The Sea of Galilee.

Riding by the foot of Hattin, over the place where, 700 years ago, Saladin annihilated the crusader's power in Palestine, we at length reached a ridge where we looked out on the distant hills of Bashan, and down far below us upon a dark blue pear or harp-shaped sheet of water, lying snugly in a deep inclosure of high brown hills. Though less than 13 miles long and seven miles broad, yet, measured by the events it has witnessed, it is a kind of Pacific Ocean. It was the Sea of Galilee.

As we moved over the long way downward to its level—650 feet below the Mediterranean Sea—we had time to grasp and fix its whole aspect and surroundings. It lacks boldness of outline, for its hills slope gradually back from the shore, or leave a narrow plain, as at Gennesaret and Buthia. But the lights and shadows lie sweetly on the hillsides at night and morning; the northern end is broken into pleasant little bays, and Hermon looms grandly up beyond, far off, yet seemingly near. The whole aspect of the lake is one that suggests the thought and the lack of beautiful homes. It was still a long ride to the lake. The region we were passing, once brimful of life and activity, was utterly forsaken now. The entire lake lay spread before us, and nearly the whole of its coast line, along or near which once lay the cities of Tarichea, Tiberias, Hippo, Gamala, Gergesa, Bethsaida, Chorazin, Capernaum, Magdala and Beth Arbel. Of these cities, Tiberias once had its Senate of 600; Gamala was able to resist and defeat Vespasian at the head of three legions, and when captured by Vespasian and Titus it lost 400 in the fight, and 5,000 who hurled themselves or were pushed down the precipices; while Tarichea, according to Josephus, was able at one time to furnish 16,500 for slaughter in a sea fight with the Romans, 1,200 slain in cold blood in the stadium, 6,000 captive youth to dig for Nero in the isthmus, and 30,000 to be sold into slavery. The only existing visible representatives of all this strength and activity were the little cluster of huts called Mejdel (Magadala) and the shrunken Tiberias, with its 2,000 inhabitants. From our path not a vistage of the other places could be discerned. It was near sunset when we entered Tiberias. We followed the road through the gate, but could easily have passed through the rents in the walls. The now squalid city, mentioned but once in the New Testament, has been the chief home of Jewish learning since the destruction of Jerusalem. Here the Jerusalem Talmud was completed, and here is now what may be called the present theological school of the Jews.—Prof. Bartlett.

A CURIOUS FACT.—Bands of music are forbidded to play on most of the large bridges of the world. A constant succession of sound waves, especially such as come from the playing of a good band, will excite the wires to vibration. At first the vibrations are very slight, but they will increase as the sound waves continue to come. The principal reason why bands are not allowed to play while crossing certain bridges, the Suspension Bridge at Niagara, for instance, is that followed by processions of any kind they will keep step with the music, and this regular step would cause the wires to vibrate. At the suspension bridge military companies are not allowed to march across in regular step, but break ranks. The reguler trotting gait of a large dog across a suspension bridge is more dangerour to the bridge than a heavy loaded wagon drawn by a team of large horses.

What surprised Noah more than aught else was that he received no applications for free passes in the ark. And what astonished the public after the flood was that the veteran navigator never tried to get up a complimentary benefit for himself.

Feeding Land With Clover.

There is no crop so valuable for the renovation of partly exhausted grain lands as clover. I say partly exhausted, for if lands are exhausted beyond a degree of fertility, the clover plant cannot be grown. There is a question that often arises in the minds of many farmers as to how they may best utilize the crop to increase fertility. One asks whether it is best for the land to plow in the first crop grown after seeding, or let it go over to a second year's growth. Having no regard for the use of land, there might be benefit to the soil by the rest of a second year, but the clover plant being a biennial (or at least it is so classed and is largely so in habit, as but few plants in ordinary soils will survive the second season,) it is evident that the first crop is best to plow in as a fertilizer and renovator. If it is the chief object of the farmer to enrich his land, and that by the growing of clover to turn in, the greatest good will be gained by plowing in the first crop when it is in full bloom and near maturity; but if profit to the farm is the object, it is best to mow the first crop for hay, feed it on the farm and apply the manure made, to the farm. A second growth of clover plowed in, with the roots of the strong-growing plant, will afford nearly as much fertility to the soil as would the first, and the hay crop and manure gained.

A Shrewd Housewife.

Nothing annoys a woman more than to have her husband bring people home to dinner without any previous notification. It spoils the meal all around, for the wife, guest and head of the family. The guest feels uncomfortable, and no matter how skillfully the wife tries to conceal her annoyance of having a poor dinner, the person who has the misfortune to receive an impromptu invitation wishes he was well out of it. There is a State official in Carson who has a weakness for taking people up home to dinner without giving his wife any previous warning. Naturally his better half—for we hold the half alluded to to be the better half—began to devise some plan to teach him better. A few days ago he came in with:

"Sis, I've brought a young man up to dinner."

"Oh, you have. Well, I'll go in the parlor and entertain him while you run down town and get the provisions. Of course when we have company we want something extra."

She sat in the parlor two hours and entertained the guest, while the miserable husband rushed about in the hot sun and got the extra provisions. A great change has come over the spirit of that man's conduct since the occasion.—Carson Appeal.

It Must Be Done.

Morality must be taught in the public schools if the nation would not become morally bankrupt. It might be difficult to determine the amount of culture for the head and heart. The recitation is the teacher's opportunity to teach the greatest of all lessons—how to live. It is the time in which to cultivate a taste for the beautiful in nature which pervades the whole universe, and to mark the deep and subtile distinctions between right and wrong. The strength, the peculiarities and duration of character, rest upon that of the individual who composes it. The foundations of character must be laid in youth. We are suffering to-day from a spirit that shuts out all moral obligations, and regards not the rights of others. Morals, as such, must be the centre of any education scheme. It is impossible to indicate the methods by which those lessons may be inculcated. These virtues must be embodied in the teacher, and radiate in rays of light. The public schools should be long enough and wide enough to embrace the knowledge of morality and truth.

Gold Hunting.

Gold hunting and gold digging fascinate thousands of persons, because the element of chance, that which makes gambling attractive, enters into their results. The New York Times publishes sundry facts about this mania, which we commend to the young:

Despite the immense yield of gold in California it is now shown that her tillable soil produces more actual wealth than her richest mines.

Her grain and her fruits exceed in value the best of her placers.

Most persons think of California as only a gold bearing state, and it is pleasant to know that her agricultural resources are beyond those of her mines.

Agriculture is apt to pay better than gold or silver seeking in any fertile, well-cultivated region; but there is a sort of fascination about the precious metals which allures men the world over, and' blinds them to the more rational and legitimate branches of industry.

A young couple in their honeymoon are dallying languidly with the grapes at dessert. She (archly)—"And you don't find it tiresome, dear, all alone with me? You are quite, quite sure that you don't wish to go back to your bachelor life again?" He (earnestly)—"Quite, my darling; indeed, married life is so awfully jolly that, you know, if you were to die to-night, I'd get married again to-morrow."

DOWNS' ELIXIR.
N. H. DOWNS'
Vegetable Balsamic
ELIXIR
This valuable medicine is purely vegetable; the discovery of which was the result of many years' close study, in order to discover the cause, the symptoms, and the cure—viz: Consumption, Coughs, Colds, Catarrh, Croup, Asthma, Pleurisy, Hoarseness, Influenza, Spitting Blood, Bronchitis, and every species of oppression of the Chest and Lungs. In all cases where this Elixir has been duly administered its efficacy has been invariably manifested, convincing the most incredulous that is not incurable, if properly attended to.—Consumption, at its commencement, is but a slight irritation of the membrane which covers the Lungs; then an inflamation, when the cough is more observable, but rather dry; then becomes local fever and the pulse more frequent, the cheeks flushed and chills more common. This Elixir in curing the above complaints, operates so as to remove all morbid irritations and inflamation from the lungs to the surface, and finally expel them from the system. It facilitates expectoration.
CONSUMPTION
It heals the ulcerated surfaces
and relieves the cough and makes the breathing easy. It supports the strength and at the same time reduces the fever. It is free from strong opiate and astringent articles, which are of so drying a nature as to be great danger of destroying the patient; whereas this medicine never dries or stops the cough, but, by removing the cause, generally destroys the hectic before the cough is entirely gone. Consequently, when the cough is cured the patient is well. Send address for pamphlet giving full directions for cure of pulmonary diseases.
Price 35 cts., 50 cts., and $1.00 per bottle.
SOLD EVERYWHERE.

MORTGAGE SALE.

ON the twentieth day of April, 1858, Peter Van Eps, and Nancy Van Eps, his wife, mortgaged to Elihu L. Clark all those tracts or parcels of land situate in the township of Hudson in the county of Lenawee and state of Michigan, bounded and described as follows, to wit: "Being village lot number five (5) on Lairds addition to the village of Hudson; being situated on section nineteen in said township of Hudson. Also one other piece or parcel of land situate in the village of Hudson, county of Lenawee, and state of Michigan, described as situated on section nineteen in said township, commencing on the north line of land deeded by Ann B. Cobb to Robert Laird, and sixteen rods west of the west division of fractions on said section nineteen and running thence northerly and parallel with the line of fractions till it strikes the southern angle line of land deeded by Harvey Cobb to David Pratt, and running thence westerly on said grantor's line till it reaches the east line of land now owned by John W. Pierce, thence southerly till it reaches the southwest corner of said Pierce's lot; thence westerly on the south line of said Pierce's lot to a point four rods west of the line first above described and mentioned as a part of the boundary; thence southerly on a line parallel with the first described line to the north line of Robert Laird's land at a point four rods west of the place of beginning; thence easterly on said Laird's north line to the place of beginning, to secure the payment of one hundred and twenty two dollars and the interest thereon. Said mortgage was, on the 23d day of April, 1885 duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for Lenawee county in Liber "U" of mortgages on folios 276, 277 and 278. This mortgage was, on the 25th day of October, 1881 duly assigned by said Elihu L. Clark to John M. Osborn, which assignment was on the 25th day of October, 1887, duly recorded in said Register's office in Liber 30 of mortgages, on pages 768 and 769. Default has been made in the conditions of said mortgage by the non-payment of the moneys due thereon by which the power of sale therein contained has become operative. There is now claimed to be due and unpaid on said mortgage the sum of two hundred and fourteen and seventy-five hundredths dollars, and no proceeding has been instituted at law or in equity to recover said sum or any part thereof. Notice is therefore hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage contained, and the statute in such case made and provided, I will sell at public vendue to the highest bidder at the front door of Dean's opera house in the city of Adrian, in said county of Lenawee, (that being the place of holding the circuit court in and for said county,) on the first day of May, 1882, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, the land above and in said mortgage described or so much thereof as may be necessary to satisfy the amount then due on said mortgage, the costs of this foreclosure and sale and a reasonable sum of money for an attorney fee as provided for in said mortgage in case of foreclosure.

TEACHERS' INSTITUTE.

The State Teachers' Institute for Lenawee county, will be held at Adrian, commencing at 2 o'clock, P. M., Monday, March 27, and closing Friday following. Prof. E. G. Walker, Adrian, local committee.

It is desired to make the Institutes of this series of the greatest practical benefit to teachers. For this purpose some of the most experienced and successful instructors have been engaged to conduct the various exercises. With revised outlines of institute work as a guide, and with the experience of the past to aid us, it is believed that the present series will be of unusual value to all.

Under the operations of the new school law better preparation and greater efficiency are demanded of teachers; and in view of this fact, all persons that intend to engage in teaching will find it greatly to their interest to be present at all the sessions of the institute to prepare for the increased requirements.

The morning and afternoon sessions will be devoted to the discussion of topics of particular interest to teachers, while the evening lectures will be of a popular character.

There will be no tuition or enrollment fee. Full particulars in regard to board, etc., may be obtained upon application to the local committee.

Distinguished Men.

There will be issued in a few days a new work entitled "Public Men of To-day." The author is Mr. P. C. Headley. He gives authentic biographies of Presidents Garfield and Arthur and their cabinets, with steel plate portraits of the two Presidents. It also gives biographies of all the Judges of the Supreme Court, all the United States Senators and all the members of the House of Representatives, and the Governors of all the states, with a fine engraving of each. The volume, which is a library in itself, will have a permanent value as a book of reference, and will be a constant educator to all who consult its prolific pages. It affords a vast amount of important and desirable information concerning the workings of the government, as exhibited in the lives, and words and deeds of those who make, interpret and execute the country's laws. There are more than three hundred life-like portraits of the subjects. Agents are wanted to sell this work by A. W. Mills, Tecumseh, Mich.

WASHINGTON NOTES.

The exports of provisions, tallow, and dairy products during January and February were valued at $22,447,776.

Benjamin F. Butler says the Garfield-Rosecrans letter was never in Kate Chase-Sprague's possession.

The solicitor general says no further action will be taken in regard to the hoop-iron cases before the supreme court until next October.

Collector Robertson is in Washington, where it is rumored that he is to be succeeded by S. B. French, one of President Arthur's intimates in New York.

The commissioner of Indian affairs favors the removal of the Apaches, Navajoe, and Moscaveation in the Indian territory.

The tobacco manufacturers, in session at Washington adopted a memorial to congress protesting against the passage of the leaf-tobacco bill, and asking that no change be made unless the cutting tax be abolished.

Capt. Sherburne, of the steamship Importer, says he thinks only 3000 Chinese will leave China for the Pacific coast within the next three months. Great activity among the Chinese about emigration is manifested.

Harry and Jimmy Garfield are expected to visit Washington during their Easter vacation, either on their way home or when returning from Cleveland to college. They will be guests of Col. Rockwell's family.

At the present rate of progress it will take thirty years to settle all the pension claims now on hand. The commissioner estimates that it would take 1,000 additional clerks to finish the work in three years.

Commissioner Fink, in his argument before the house committee on commerce, said the Regan bill would destroy the system he is designed to perfect. He urged that congress give the existing railroad commission the power to impose penalties.

While the house commerce committee will have the river and harbor bill perfected before long, it will not be reported to the house for a month. When the skeleton is complete, congressmen representing localities desiring improvements will then be heard, and there may be some changes in the bill.

The senate committee on Indian affairs will make a favorable report on Mr. Cox's bill to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to members of tribes in reservations, and to extend the operations of the civil and criminal laws of the respective states or territories over such area.

Messrs. Backner, of Missouri, and Singleton, of Illinois, have decided to support some amendment to the house which will prevent filibustering on a motion to take up a bill for consideration. They have become satisfied that the house is now tied up by its own rules to such an extent as to prevent useful legislation.

Minister Morton cabled Secretary Frelinghuysen a statement that he had never been connected with any business transactions needing the intervention of the United States, but his firm had a contract to receive nitrates and guano shipped to New York in the ordinary course of commerce.

Senator Rollins, of New Hampshire, has offered an amendment to the bill recently passed by the house respecting the removal of discriminating duties on tea and coffee produced by the possessions of the Netherlands. The amendment enlarges the scope of the act so as to include not only tea and coffee, but all goods, wares, and merchandise the growth or produce of countries east of the Cape of Good Hope. The act is to take effect next July.

The house committee on the improvement of the Mississippi river has agreed to recommend an appropriation of $750,000 in addition to the sum already appropriated, and the gross amount will be devoted to the improvement of the river from St. Paul to its mouth, instead of from the junction of the Ohio with the Mississippi river, as provided in the first appropriation.

The postmaster general is in Boston on official business, and announces his intention to shorten the time of mails between New York and San Francisco. He will ask the railways west of Chicago to run to the Pacific in four hours' less time, and to deliver at the same period the departure of mail at mountain towns, giving the people of San Francisco twelve hours of good day to receive and answer correspondence.

[illegible] Cook, special agent [illegible] of which he resigned because he [illegible] most favorable industry [illegible] ments not being shown in colored Miss [illegible] of the opinion that Cook and Gibbons were [illegible] to be deposed, as to their [illegible] of financial institutions was [illegible] in the case.

Congressman Park appeared before the house committee on W. and M. [illegible] his views on the tariff question [illegible]. He warned the members that the problem was too large to be dealt with in a few words, and stated that the [illegible] railroad land grants do not the subject of special inquiries in this country. The main questions are whether or not the services of railroads have been rendered at reasonable cost, and if the cost has been equitably assessed on the people.

The subcommittee of the Mississippi levee and improvement committee will report the bills introduced by Messrs. Gibson and Robertson. The former measure appropriates $2,500,000 for building and repairing levees, and the latter defines the powers of the river commission. The house commerce committee decided to insert in the river and harbor bill an item of $600,000 for the Mississippi between the mouths of the Ohio and Illinois.

The value of breadstuffs exported during the eight months ending with February last, as reported by the bureau of statistics, was $135,000,000, against $182,000,000 for the corresponding eight months of last year—a decrease of $47,000,000. The greater portion of this decrease was in wheat, which fell off 35,000,000 bushels in quantity and $33,000,000 in value. In wheat flour the decrease was over 6,000,000. Indian corn 22,000,000 bushels in quantity and nearly $8,000,000 in value, and in rye $1,000,000 and a like number of bushels.

The committee on elections unanimously agreed to report favorably the bill offered by Mr. Jacobs relating to contested elections, and instructed the chairman to endeavor to secure its passage under a suspension of the rules. The bill contains some very necessary provisions respecting the custody of testimony in contested cases after it reaches the house of representatives, and imposes upon the clerk of the committee on elections new and important duties. The clerk is to hold office until his successor is appointed, and shall, when required, prepare a digest of election cases. The design of the bill is to secure more prompt disposition of contested cases, a reform which is greatly needed.

The chief of the bureau of statistics reports that in the month of February there arrived in the customs districts of Baltimore, Boston, Detroit, Huron, Minnesota, New Orleans, New York, Passamaquoddy, Philadelphia, and San Francisco 39,447 passengers, of whom 28,247 were immigrants. Of this total number of immigrants there arrived from England and Wales 3,037; Ireland, 1,461; Scotland, 501; Austria, 698; Belgium, 27; Denmark, 289; France, 275; Germany, 8,626; Hungary, 1,534; Italy, 1,777; Netherlands, 235; Norway, 193; Poland, 353; Russia, 1,052; Sweden, 431; Switzerland, 431; Dominion of Canada, 3,771; China, 3,380, and from all other countries 164. The total number of immigrants arrived in the above named customs districts during the eight months ended was 375,090, as against 296,475 for the corresponding period of the previous year.

Her Daughter's Story.

"My mother, residing at Stamford, Conn., is 83 years of age, and for four years has suffered from Rheumatism; so much so that she was unable to move about the house. A lady friend induced her to try your Favorite Remedy. She did so and found great relief." The above is a quotation from a late letter addressed to Dr. David Kennedy of Roundout, N. Y. "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" not only cures Rheumatism, but is the popular specific for all diseases of the blood and the ills incident to females.

A Sabbath School Institute and Convention to organize a Sunday School Union for Lenawee county will be held at the Baptist church in this village on Sunday and Monday, April 2d and 3d.

Tom Bennet will build a new house this spring.

MACON CENTER.

Republican Caucus 2 o'clock P. M. Friday, March 31, at Grange hall. Anti-monopoly Caucus 1 o'clock P. M. the same day at Lake Ridge school house.

Mrs. Emery, of Lansing, lectured at Grange Hall last Friday evening; subject, Anti-monopoly. She held the full house quiet for two hours in a very able lecture, during which she explained how the would-be national banker could repair to Washington with his $100,000 in currency and buy a $100,000 interest bearing bond, then receive $90,000 of the same money back as a business starter, which he loans out to his customers at a high rate of interest, thereby compelling the people to pay double interest, one on the circulating medium and another on the bonds.

MR. ED.—Your figures on the sheep problem are not the correct answer. The best method of solution is, first to correct the weights, then adjust the loss. Next.

T. F. Moore, lecturer of the county grange, will lecture before the Macon grange in open session and the red ribbon club, on Friday evening, April 7. Subject, "Whiskey and Prisons." Mr. Moore has been connected with the prison at Ionia and knows whereof he speaks. The young are especially invited.

Died, at her home in Macon, March 20, 9-20 P. M., Mrs. Sarah Spaulding, widow of Samuel Spaulding, deceased, aged 90 yrs. 3 mo. and 2 days. Funeral the 22d, 11 A. M., conducted by Rev. J. A. De Spelder, and the remains deposited in the Lake Ridge cemetery. Deceased leaves a large circle of friends, among whom are 8 children, the youngest 45 and the oldest 72 years. Like most persons of her age her life has been one of toil and anxiety, extending way back of the war of 1812, during which she had the care of a family of small children, while her husband was in the service. But the uncomplaining fortitude and matronly care and devotion for home and kindred with which she met the varied changes of this long life, has endeared her to friends and acquaintances.

Edward Hoagland, who has been a long sufferer from consumption, died the 21st, aged 32 years. Funeral the 23d conducted by Elder Price and the remains deposited in Lake Ridge cemetery.

Mrs. Jno. Miller died the 23d of inflamation of the lungs. Funeral at the German church and burial in Lake Ridge cemetery.

John Emmans says he will give the land and $50 towards a union hall, so that the people may have a place to hold the various gatherings incident to life and death.

CLINTON.

Mrs. M. Nimocks has returned from her eastern visit.

Charlie Keyes of Grand Rapids is in town.

Several teachers and some scholars from this place attended the institute at Adrian.

Mrs. Hubell Smith, who has been very sick for some days, is now better.

Miss Libbie Newcomb of Painesville Ohio, is visiting her sister, Mrs. J.T. Clark.

A few persons from Clinton attended "Widow Bedott" Tuesday night.

There is soon to be a literary entertainment here given by amatuers.

D. H. Silvers is packing his household goods this week. He goes to Manchester, his future home, next Monday.

About a dozen Tecumseh youths walked up here Sunday afternoon, and after looking around the village an hour or two, got Vet Erskine to take them home.

Mr. George Kishpaugh is moving his worldly possessions to Chase's Corners, where he has purchased a farm.

We understand that Ed. Clark was exposed to the small-pox last Friday by passing through a sleeper on a Toledo train. He has since been ordered off the streets.

L. A. Dudley is off duty and will visit Clinton friends for a few weeks. He has been out of health for some time and thinks a vacation is needed.

S. Erskine is fast making improvements on the Silvers House. He intends this spring to build the back part of the house two stories higher than it now is, which will make pleasant rooms for transients.

The attempt to rob the grave of Jno. Collins last week was rendered futile by the vigilance of the watches. The noise they made upon discovering the workers was enough to warn them and they immediately gave up the task, making the shots that were fired after them unnecessary.

Addie St. John has recently returned from Jonesville and commenced business as undertaker. It is needless to say he fully understands the business he is engaged in, as he has had several years experience. We think it will be for the interest of the public to have some competition, considering the unreasonably high prices that have been charged on recent occassions.

SPRINGVILLE.

John Smith, of Charlotte gave us a short call last week.

Anson Ayres and family returned from quite a lengthy visit to the north part of the state, Tuesday.

Nine new members were received at the Lodge of Sons of Temperance, Tuesday evening, and quite a number more names were proposed.

Mr. Hough, of Bay City, the state organizer and lecturer for the Sons of Temperance, lectured at the M. E. church Sunday evening.

The Springville school will commence next Monday with Miss Hattie Helm of Tecumseh as teacher.

Considerable excitement is prevailing here over the coming township meeting. There will be five tickets in the field—democrat, republican, national, temperance and young men's ticket.

The entertainment given by the Springville cornet band last Friday evening was a success, the house being well filled. The two plays, An only daughter, and Hans Von Smash, are well worth hearing. The members have been requested to repeat the entertainment, which they will do Monday evening, April 3d. With the exception of the two plays the exercises will be mostly new. Admission 15 and 10 cts.

RIDGEWAY.

Both caucuses Saturday P. M.

Miss Ella Hall is expected home from Brooklyn, N. Y., within a short time.

If anyone has a log chain which does not belong to them, Joshua Waring would like to know it as he has two less then he had a year ago.

Rev. R. S. Pardington will lecture on temperance next Sunday evening at the M. E. church, it being the regular evening for the meeting of the temperance alliance.

Miss Lula Monaghan, of Tecumseh will open the village school next week. She is an experienced teacher and a good school is expected.

Rufus Raymond will move on his farm east of Holloway station next week, and Lafayette Rappleye takes possession of the place to be vacated.

Sam'l Barlow is making improvements on the Freer farm, preparatory to moving there in a short time.

J. C. Freer has purchased a farm of 100 acres, 2½ miles from Mason, Ingham co., where he and family intend to move soon.

Sup. Manning offered a resolution that all claims of township drain commissioners be referred to the committee on drains. Adopted.

The county clerk's report of orders drawn on drains was adopted.

Sup. Pratt moved that the matter of justice's fees be made the special order for Thursday.

Sup. Swaney, from the committee on claims, reported back a large number of minor claims, for officers' and witness fees, and also some few in payment of superintendents of the poor and justices of the peace, averaging in the neighborhood of a hundred dollars each, which report was accepted and adopted.

Sup. Dreher, from the committee on drains, reported that as not enough funds were on hand to pay the sum total on a certain number of county drains, the committee would recommend that the board instruct the county clerk to divide the orders of each drain, making the sums of the divided orders to correspond with the sums on hand for their payment. The drains on which the orders are to be divided are Nos. 203, 171, 183, 215. Report accepted and adopted.

Sup. Pratt moved that the committee on claims be instructed to reject all charges for services rendered in the prosecution of all actions brought for the violation of city ordinance. Motion adopted.

Adjourned until 2 P. M.

MARCH 23.—The board met pursuant to adjournment at 2 P. M.

Sup. Cogswell, from the judiciary committee, reported that the board had full power to appoint an agent to sell county property, an objection having been raised when it was proposed to sell the old jail property in this manner. The appointment of Sup. Warren as agent to sell the old jail property was accordingly confirmed.

Sup. Harkness, from the special committee to examine the documents of the justices of the peace of the city of Adrian, reported that, during the past year, the justices had collected $127.24 as fines and had paid $38 to the county treasurer and the balance to the city treasurer.

Sup. Love introduced a resolution which was accepted and adopted, thanking the Chairman and County Clerk for their ability and efficiency.

This morning, at the closing session of the board Sup. Pratt, from the special committee to ascertain the amount of outstanding drain orders, reported that it would be impossible to ascertain the exact amount of the orders, but that the committee estimated their aggregate amount at about $500.

The preamble and resolutions of Sup. Dreher, requesting that all drain funds now in the hands of the county treasurer be turned over to the treasurers of the various townships in which the drains are situated, was finally adopted, the vote standing 16 to 9.

Sup. Pratt introduced a resolution requesting the prosecuting attorney to furnish to the board, at its October meeting, a list of all criminal prosecutions from April 1st to October 1st, and the results in each case.

Some of the older members of the board then indulged in a little speech-making on the death of the present board, after which it adjourned sine die.

A Novel and Perfect Cure for Scrofula, Salt Rheum, Cancer, Etc.

A discovery has recently been made which adds luster to the Nineteenth Century. It consists simply in an extract from the Red Clover Blossom, as extracted by J. M. Loose & Co., Monroe, Mich., who have gone into the business largely in order to supply the increasing demand. For sale by Wright & Co. A slight testimonial:

Toledo, Ohio, Jan. 17th, 1882.

J. M. Loose & Co., Monroe, Mich., Gentlemen:—My wife has for some time been afflicted with something like a scrofulous disease, and found no relief until she gave your Extract of Red Clover a trial. I am happy to say she has experienced great relief.—This is but a single testimonial of my appreciation of your efforts in behalf of humanity, which you are welcome to use for their benefit. I am very respectfully. H. ARMS.

Who's the Best Physician.

The one that does most to relieve suffering humanity of the thousand and one ills that befall them, bringing joy to sorrowing thousands, is certainly the best of all physicians.—Electric Bitters are daily doing this, curing hundreds that have tried all other remedies and found no relief.—As a Spring tonic and blood purifier they are a perfect specific, and for liver and kidney complaints have no equal. In the strongest sense of the term, they are positively the best and cheapest physician known.—Daily Times. Sold by all druggists at 50 cts.

A Remarkable Escape.

Mrs. Geo. C. Clarke, of Port Dalhousie, Ontario, states that she had been confined to her room for a long time with that dreadful disease, Consumption. The doctors said she could not escape an early grave, but fortunately she began taking Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, and in a short time was completely cured. Doubting ones, please write Mrs. Clarke, and be convinced. Sold by all druggists.

Mothers Don't Know—How many children are punished for being uncouth, wilful, and indifferent to instructions or rewards, simply because they are out of health! An intelligent lady said of a child of this kind: "Mothers should know that if they would give the little ones moderate doses of Hop Bitters for two or three weeks, the children would be all a parent could desire."

THE FAMILY CIRCLE.

REST.

Knitting, busy knitting,
The dear old grandma sits,
While through the window sunshine
The lazy hours kiss.
It lights on the well-worn bible,
And sways its beautiful wings,
While the good old grandmother ponders
And sweetly her feebly sings.

The lively needles rest and slumber,
Stand idlely the upper deal;
Idles contented watch the wheel and spindle,
[illegible]
The [illegible] off [illegible]
And listen to the sweet [illegible]
While [illegible] with the treasures
Counting [illegible]
And [illegible] the knitting,
And [illegible] lands,
She wooing the butterfly sitting,
And folded are grandmother's hands.

She dreams the boys little feet coming,
And all her soul pulses are stirred,
Pondering over the sound of boys humming,
The voices of children are heard.
They troop up the garden path gaily,
And rush through the doorway in glee;
But soon, in fulmire satisfaction,
Are seated on grandmother's knee.
She tell them the old-time stories,
And presses upon each to her breast,
Calls them grandmother's dear morning-glories,
And no one knows which she loves best.

Her dreams change slowly to others
More sad, and yet they are bright,
For three little heads are all shining
Above her, like angels of light;
And six little fair hands are beckoning,
And a bright golden gate opens wide,
Where her dear old husband stands waiting
And gladly she walks by his side.

And thus, sweetly resting, they found her
That day at the setting of sun,
With a halo of glory around her,
For grandmother's work was done!

WILTS MURCH'S SERENADERS.

BY E. A. STEPHENS.

In a certain rural town down east where the narrator formerly resided, there was at one time a clique of rough young fellows who made it their business to serenade all newly wedded couples.

"Serenading" was what they were pleased to call it; but it was far from being either a musical or complimentary performance. In fact it was a terrible bugbear for all prospective brides and bridegrooms. On the evening of the marriage, this serenade-party, numbering fifteen or twenty members, was sure to make its unwelcome appearance in the yard, liberally provided with fish-horns, old tin pans, guns and almost every other possible instrument of din and racket.

These rude fellows came disguised in masks and old clothes; and the first hint of their approach was usually a discharge of guns, a racket of stones on the roof, blended with a horrible blare of horns and imitation of Indian war-hoops.

If the newly-made husband did not wish that sort of music continued all night, he must arise, open his doors and invite in these unwelcome guests.

Once in the house, they would make themselves very much at home and expect to be "treated" to a good supper, or else to be furnished with a handsome sum of money with which to go away and provide a supper for themselves.

This was not the worst. For the boors usually demanded that the bride should be brought into the room, and often insisted—disguised and masked as they were—on saluting her with a kiss.

If admittance was refused them, they kept up their terrific din, hour after hour, and sometimes they had broken into houses. Often they got on the roof to continue their deafening fanfarade; indeed, there was no end of their pranks; and if not treated with so much liberality as they thought due them, they would come again night after night.

Occasionally they met with a rough reception in the shape of hot water, jets of kerosene oil from squirt-guns, and shots had even been fired at them.

That they were an abominable nuisance and an outrage on all rights and decency, was admitted by every one; yet it was difficult to proceed against them legally, and the party was powerful enough to make itself feared as well as hated. Otherwise, it would have been promptly broken up by an indignant community.

I have tried to learn the origin of such serenading, and I think the custom came to us from among the French Canadians of the Lower Provinces. For these people have a trick which they call "charavari," where a party, fantastically dressed and equipped, with cracked fiddles, horns and kettle-drums, sometimes go to "wake" a wedding when there is some circumstance about it which offends public taste; as, for example, when the bride is many years older than the bridegroom, or if, on the other hand, an old gray-beard were to take a very young wife.

Such were the serenaders, and such was the state of affairs at the time of the marriage of a young man named Willis Murch, a friend and neighbor of the writer.

"Willis, or Wilts, as we called him, was a quick-witted young man, and possessed a great deal of good sense and sturdy independence. I had often heard him say, whenever we would hear of a serenade, that he would never let that company into his house, nor give them a cent to carouse on.

When Wilts came to be twenty-one his parents wanted him to live at home on their farm and take care of them. It was no desirable offer. There was a heavy mortgage on the farm, and there were two helpless, bed-ridden members of the family. Willis, too, had been planning to go West as soon as he came of age; and he was just the man to make his way in the West and do well. But he conscientiously gave up his plans for the sake of the old people, and settled down at home, like the good son he was, to pay off the debts on the place and "see his folks through," as the neighbors expressed it.

There was another, too, concerned in this sacrifice of Wilts' plans—Amanda Bachelder, a schoolmate and very dear friend of Wilts', and who, it was said, was as like him as two people could be. It had long been an understood thing that when Wilts went West Manda Bachelder would go with him as Mrs. Murch.

There was a wedding that fall, on Thanksgiving day morning—Wilts and Manda. They moved home, that is to say, to Wilt's home, that afternoon.

That day, at the store at the corners, a fellow named Gallison, supposed to be connected with the "serenade gang," hinted to Wilts that he hoped he (Willis) was "laying in a stock of good things" for the "celebration" that night.

"What do you mean by 'celebration?' Wilts asked him.

"Oh, you'll find out soon enough," said Gallison, laughing, and with a wink to the others.

"You mean the 'serenading-gang?' said Wilts.

"Like enough," replied Gallison. "I shouldn't wonder a mite."

"You expect me to open my house and furnish supper for the 'roughs of the town? Then let me tell you once for all, that I shall do nothing of the sort; and, if you are to take my advice, you will keep away and mind your own business and leave me to mind mine. I've no money to spend in entertainments of any kind."

"Perhaps you mean to shoot us," sneered Gallison. "We've seen guns before."

"No matter what I mean to do," said Wilts. "I warn you to keep away."

This warning on Wilts' part only stimulated these unfortunate lout fellows to do their [illegible] and at exactly 10 o'clock that evening they opened the frame with a discharge of guns, tooting of horns and drumming, accompanied by a shower of brick-bats on the roof.

We heard it all over the neighborhood and wondered, not without some misgivings, what Wilts would do.

He did nothing. He had so securely fastened up the doors and windows below, and he remained quietly within.

Blow and whoop they did, but Wilts gave no sign that he heard them.

About midnight, however, old Mr. Murch, Willis' father, nearly crazed by the noise, opened a window, and very civilly asked the party to go away and let him get a little sleep. They answered this request with such a deafening noise that the old gentleman was glad to draw in his head and shut the window.

They did not quite dare to break into the house with axes; they knew Wilts' courage too well. Daylight dispersed them. But they promised loudly, ere departing, to come back next night.

During the day, Wilts called on two of his neighbors, young men like himself, and asked them to come over to his place that afternoon, and stay over night in the house.

"Our friends, of last night's hullabaloo have promised to come back," said he, "and you may see some fun if things work right."

Just at dusk, two young fellows—whose names need not be given—accepted the invitation, and went to the house.

The kitchen there was a large low room, and the outside door opened into it from off the piazza. Wilts had just put two very strong staples and hasps on this door for fastening it on the outside. It was a very strong oak door. On the outside, too, he had put two strong plank shutters on the kitchen windows. Two doors leading into the wood house and the other into the sitting room ready for fastening on the outside from the kitchen, with bars and hasps. In short, Wilts had made of the kitchen a cage strong enough for a prison cell.

During the evening, he set out on the kitchen table a large basketful of good eating apples and a jug of new cider, with glasses. A candle was left burning here; and in the large Canadian stove a good fire of hardwood logs was shut up, burning slowly. To his two young friends who had been taken into the stratagem, Willis showed an auger-hole bored in the ceiling, directly over the stove.

The evening passed pleasantly. It was cloudy and pretty dark. The serenaders gathered about the house very quietly. But promptly at ten o'clock, the noise of the night before was repeated. Guns, horns, drums, stones on the roof, and heavy blows on the side of the house.

At length, some of them who were trying the lower windows discovered that the kitchen door under the piazza was not fastened. They then threw it open, and seeing the apples and cider, all walked in and began to help themselves. Perhaps they fancied that these refreshments had been set out on purpose to propitiate them.

It was a rather chilly evening out. The warm stove was very comfortable. They shut the door and sat down.

Meantime, Wilts and his friends had been looking through the auger-hole; and one of them now slipped down the back stairs into the woodhouse, and going round on the piazza, quietly hasped the kitchen door on the outside.

They were not long in drinking up the cider. Then they began shouting for Willis and Manda.

"Don't think you'll get off with a mess of apples and cider! You haven't seen the last of us so easy. Ten dollars for drinks, Wilts! We must have something more out of you!"

"Well," said Willis, through the auger-hole, "you shall have something more!" and with that, he blew a whole paper of cayenne pepper through a piece of lead pipe down upon the hot stove!

In an instant, the whole kitchen was full of the fiery, pungent dust!

There came up an enraged shout, followed by a rush for the door. The intruders found the door hard and fast.

It is quite useless to try fully to depict what followed. The invaders screeched, pounded and sneezed. Some bagged and screamed; some threw themselves flat on the floor with their faces down, to get air. They could neither see nor breathe in that fiery atmosphere.

At last one of the serenaders, by dint of pounding with the butt of a gun, fairly stove off one of the plank shutters from the front window, and the whole party tumbled out, nearly blinded, and sneezing as if their heads would burst. They were so badly punished that they hurried off at once, and we heard that several of them were sick for a week.

The story flew through the town, and the serenaders were joked and jeered at by the people. They had to confess themselves beaten. "Hahpish-oo!" was the joke which they heard on all sides. That was the last charavari they ever attempted.

A Story of the War.

WHAT CAUSED THE CONFEDERATE SWEET POTATOES TO DISAPPEAR.

Mr. Joseph Wingfield, an ex-guardsman of Libby Prison, tells the following story of his experience while standing guard over the prisoners one night in Libby Prison in 1863: "The building was so crowded with prisoners that a large number of them were quartered in the second story of a building across the street. In the first story of this building the prison officers had stowed a large supply of splendid sweet potatoes. [illegible] the third day after the prisoners had been placed in the building it was noticed that the potatoes were disappearing at the rate of about a bushel a day. At first it was thought that the rats had taken them, but a second thought showed that the idea was absurd. Sentinels were posted around the building, with orders to shoot any man caught stealing those potatoes; but they didn't see anybody to shoot, and although they were posted there day and night, and no one was allowed to enter the room in which the potatoes were kept, they still continued to disappear." These potatoes at that time were considered luxuries, and the Confederate officers were nearly wild with rage at their repeated losses. The doors and windows of the room were sealed, and private marks were put on the wax. The next morning the officers went into the room. The wax was all right, but another bushel of potatoes had vanished. It was the maddest crowd you ever saw. They locked me in, and a lighted candle was put at each end of the room so that I could see. I was ordered to shoot on sight anybody that I saw stealing those yams. It was terrible lonesome in that room. Just as fast as I would light one candle and go to the other end of the room to light the other, the rats would cut the first one down. They were regular Confederate rats, and a candle was a godsend to them. About midnight I heard a creaking grating noise. I cocked my gun and listened. The noise ceased. I could see nothing but the rats and I began to think that the place was haunted. Presently the noise occurred again. I looked at the pile of potatoes, and presently saw something shoot from the ceiling and fall on them. I saw it was a brick, and could distinguish a rope tied to it. I crept a little nearer to get a good look at the thing, but before I could examine it, it was drawn slowly up, and there was about a peck of potatoes sticking to it. It went up through a hole which had been cut in the floor above, and presently came down again with a thump right among the potatoes. It was the most artful arrangement you ever saw. The brick had about fifty holes drilled in it, and through each hole a sharpened tenpenny nail had been run, so that when the brick fell among the potatoes these nails stuck into every one they fell on. I could not help laughing at the smart dodge those Yankees had taken. I gently put my hand forward and caught hold of the rope. Pretty soon they began to draw on it, and when it did not move I heard one fellow say: 'Steady boys; the brick's hung in something. Pull her steady without jerking.' They did pull steadily, and fairly lifted me from the floor. 'No jerk; easy boys, easy,' the director said, and they tugged away. I got pretty red in the face holding to the rope. I was afraid to let go, because I thought some of those spiked nails might strike me in passing. I thought of my pocket knife and hauled it out just as they were putting all their weight on the other end of the rope. I cut it in two and the end shot back through the hole in the ceiling, and I could hear a rolling and tumbling on the floor above, showing that the sudden giving way of the rope had a disastrous effect. I heard another voice say: 'There, now, I told you so. You've broken the rope. We've lost our brick, and to morrow we'll be found out. Can't you see it? We might hook it up.' Next I saw a long neck protruding through the hole, and a fellow peering down. Then I called out: 'If you trouble any more of those potatoes I'll shoot.' That fellow's head shot back through that hole just like a terrapin, and it was as still as death up there. I hated to tell on them, because it was such a sharp scheme of foraging on the enemy, but I had to. When the officers went up the next morning to examine the room it took a long time to find the hole. Those Yankees had cut a hole about a foot square through the floor, and it was done so neatly that it took good eyes to discover it."

More Thorough Education.

The propriety of teaching every young person some useful occupation while attending school, or at least during school years, is again attracting attention. Young men who grow up in cities and villages are afforded excellent opportunities of acquiring a book education. But that alone does not qualify them to earn an independent living and become useful citizens. The many thousands of boys now attending school in cities and villages cannot all find employment as clerks, salesmen, merchants, lawyers and physicians.

Every young man, regardless of the pecuniary circumstances of their parents, shold be trained to some useful occupation—should be qualified to earn a living with his hands if necessary. The public, however, cannot make provision for giving instruction in manual labor—in the mechanic arts, or in agriculture. That is something that the parents or the boys themselves must look after; and every school boy who tries can readily find an instructor in some branch of handiwork.

Boys from fourteen to twenty who attend school should spend a reasonable time in learning a trade, or in work on a farm. They should not expect to be paid for their work, at least during the first and second years. City parents who can afford to should send their sons to the country during vacations, both winter and summer, where they will be instructed in handling horses, feeding stock, and in the cultivation of the earth; and above all, where they will be afforded opportunities to think—opportunities which boys reared exclusively in cities seldom enjoy.

The walks of a professional life are already overcrowded. There are about three times as many competent clerks as there are clerkships, and competent salesmen are almost as numerous as customers. But no matter what may be the prospects, aims or expectations of a young man, his education is never complete so long as he is incapable of earning a living with his hands. Young men should note the fact that almost without exception eminent and successful physicians, lawyers, college professors, bankers, merchants and statesmen are skilled workers as agriculturists, or in some branch of mechanism.

Beauty Regained.

The beauty and color of the hair may be safely regained by using Parker's Hair Balsam, which is much admired for its perfume, cleanliness and dandruff eradicating properties.

Birds of Winter.

There are no more winsome guests in winter than the graceful little snow-bird. What beautiful, perfectly-finished pieces of nature's workmanship they are! How intense is the lustre of their tiny black eyes! What a vivid ray of intelligence darts from those electric life-centers! All birds impress us with a keen sense of their abounding vitality; but the snow-bird is one of those in which we recognize a something closely akin to an acutely-sensitive, delicately organized human being. There is a dreamy suggestiveness of poetic beauty about the [illegible] pure ivory whiteness of their slender bill, so daintily turned, so smoothly polished, translucent and pinky in the sunlight, is a unique mark of aristocratic distinction.

Of a different race from these mild and gentle pets are the pugnacious English sparrows, who battle so fiercely over the possession of a bigger crumb or a fuller grain. They are of the earth earthy; and their chatterings, their scoldings and squabbles are quite as commonplace as those of their human brothers. Crowding to the feeding ground in noisy flocks, they settle down contentedly to the repast, each fluffy little ball of feathers strongly relieved against the snow, then rising with many flutterings and chirpings, they circle merrily in the welcome gleams of winter sunshine, leaving the snowy surface just trodden so diligently by them covered with an intricate pattern of delicate net-work, the markings made by those slender but busy little feet of theirs.

The chikadee, or titmouse, that tiny bird whose cheery courage in braving the rigors of our winter Emerson has shown forth in the crystal mirror of his verse, is our occasional guest at this season. In his thick plumage of gray and black, relieved with white, so suggestive in its color and texture of the furs worn by some arctic explorer, he bravely makes his way through the snowy woods, pecking now and again, while his merry note rings forth no unmeaning challenge to all the powers of the air that await in the train of old winter and do his bidding. Ice, frost, snow, sleet, hail, rain, he cheerfully meets them all undaunted. Whether the storm-cloud darkens the air with smothering flakes, or whether the spirit of piercing cold, whose touch is a stab, and whose grasp is death, walks abroad, the radiant heart of the chickadee beats unchilled and his clear note still sounds on in triumph of gayety. What a fiery spark of vitality burns in the breast of this least of creatures!

"Here moves this atom in full breath, Hurling defiance at vast death."

But passing from the chicadee to another bird of the same race, the downy woodpecker, we can but pay homage in our strongest terms of admiration to so exquisite a creature, an incarnation of nature's most dainty and luxurious mood. My lord is assuredly one of the darlings of luxury. The adjective downy, which descriptive science has applied to him exactly suggests the texture and gloss of his wonderful plumage. The prince of the woodpeckers rarely condescends to display his royal robes of velvet and ermine—velvet of the richest, jettiest dye, ermine of the purest, intensest whiteness—in the plebeian precints of our door-yards; but on some damp November morning you may hear his high, insistent, repeated note, and glancing out you will soon discover this feathered aristocrat fluttering about, with an assured air of domination among the leafless branches, while he taps the bark with his powerful bill, after the characteristic manner of his race. He is scarcely larger than a robin, though his white plumage enhances his apparent size, and his mottled markings even suggest something as familiar as the feathers of the silver-spangled Poland fowls, but no robin, much less, a domestic fowl, ever bore himself with the lordly ease of this free creature of the woods. You may come quite near him; he hardly deigns to notice your approach; nor shows any more fear of you than of the small birds who gather in humble admiration around the superb stranger, or hurriedly retire before his imposing presence. Fresh from the solitude of the deep woods, he knows no law but his own regal will, no domain other than that which he claims by hereditary right. When you have succeeded in prevailing upon this royal wanderer to accept your poor hospitality, you feel as deeply honored as did any humble adherent of the exiled Stuart, when that monarch graciously supped with his royal retainer.

How Irish Peasants Live.

The dens, misnamed cots, in which the peasantry of Galway and Mayo counties live are merely stone shelters; owing to the intense ignorance of the people they are not provided with any facilities for drainage, and are often incomparably filthy. The floors are of hard mud; it is rare to find more than one room in a hut, and only one story. Beds and bedding are luxuries which the poorer tenants do not possess; old heaps of hay and straw are the couches on which the lovely, brown-eyed, large-browed maidens of Connaught repose. The smoke from a peat fire in a common peasant's cabin spreads through the room, and you narrowly escape strangulation on your first visit. I have had this experience in Herzegovina, and consequently minded the smoke but little. How family decency is maintained in these dens is a mystery, and how the people manage to keep clean—for they look clean—is a puzzle. The pigs run in and out of the doors—and such wretched pigs! A North Carolina wild hog would be an aristocrat beside them! In dozens of these cabins sick people are to be found—sick people dependent either on the charity of their neighbors or on friends in America, who send them small sums. A gentleman in Galway told me that the agents of landlords treated the poorer tenantry as if they were animals. He instanced the case of one agent who, on rent day, when any tenant was short a half crown in his payment, would knock the money off the table on to the floor, so as to humiliate the tenant before his fellows. Up to a recent date even the better class of tenants would not have dared to resent such behavior; they were ready to fawn before the man who insulted them. Now the tables are turned, and the agent sneaks in and out among the people, taking 25 per cent. less than the usual rental, if indeed he gets anything at all, and is glad to get away again out of the farming district with his head still on his shoulders.—Edward King's letter from Galway.

How to Save.

All hard workers are subject to bilious attacks, which may end in dangerous illness. Parker's Ginger Tonic will keep the kidneys and liver active, and by preventing the attack save much sickness, loss of time and expense. Delay at such time means danger.—Detroit Press. See other column.

TO THE AFFLICTED.

Since the introduction of Kellogg's Columbian Oil it has made more permanent cures and given better satisfaction on Kidney Complaints and Rheumatism than any known remedy. Its continued series of wonderful cures in all climates has made it known as a safe and reliable agent to employ against all aches and pains, which are the forerunners of more serious disorders. It acts speedily and surely, at a trifling outlay and often saving life. The protection it affords by its timely use on changes, Kidney affection, and all aches and pains, wounds, sprains, bites, cholera morbus, diarrhœa, colds, coughs, and disorders among children, makes it an invaluable remedy to be kept always on hand in every home. No person can afford to be without it, and those who have once used it never will. It is absolutely certain in its remedial effects, and will always cure when cure is possible. Call at C. A. Wright & Co's and get a medical pamphlet, book giving full details of the curative properties of this wonderful medicine.

Correct speech is such an indisputable mark of a lady or gentleman that it cannot be too often repeated that the true standard of pronunciation is one in which all marks of a particular place of birth and residence are lost, and in which nothing appears to indicate any habits of intercourse other than with the well-bred and well-informed wherever they may be found. In the matter of accent, vocabulary and pronunciation, the aim ought to be avoid all that is local, affected or vulgar. Let no transgressors imagine they can escape with impunity. Their speech will betray them, and even well educated children will be merry and satirical over them behind their backs.

Her Daughter's Story.

"My mother, residing at Stamford, Conn., is 83 years of age, and for four years has suffered from Rheumatism; so much so that she was unable to move about the house. A lady friend induced her to try your Favorite Remedy. She did so and found great relief." The above is a quotation from a late letter addressed to Dr. David Kennedy of Roundout, N. Y. "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" not only cures Rheumatism, but is the popular specific for all diseases of the blood and the ills incident to females.

An Addison (Vt.) man, who was a habitual smoker for fifty years, without missing a day, finally laid aside his pipe for good afterwards saying he had not the slightest inclination to use it again.

POSITIVELY CURED

BY

Benson's Capcine Porous Plasters.

Reasons Why they are Preferred to All Other Porous Plasters or External Remedies:

First.

Because they possess all the merit of the strengthening porous plaster, and contain in addition thereto the newly discovered powerful and active vegetable combination which acts with increased rubefacient, stimulating, sedative and counter irritant effects.

Second.

Because they are a genuine pharmaceutical preparation, and so recognized by the profession.

Third.

Because they are the only plasters that relieve pain at once.

Fourth.

Because they will positively cure diseases which other remedies will not even relieve.

Fifth.

Because over 2000 physicians and druggists have voluntarily testified that they are superior to all other plasters or medicines for external use.

Sixth.

Because the manufacturers have received the only medals ever given for porous plasters.

The Clock Said His Time Had Come.

About midnight the other evening the door-bell of one of our physicians rang violently, and the doctor, putting his mouth to the speaking tube, asked what was wanted. "I must see you right away," replied the voice. "But I am sick and not able to attend to business," said the doctor. "No matter," said the voice, "I must see you anyway." The physician arose—it was bitter cold and he was quite ill—donned his clothes, and proceeded to the front door, let in, along with a strong blast of zero air, a man and a woman. Neither looked very [illegible] of health, but the man's eyes rolled rather wildly, and he appeared somewhat disturbed. "Well," said the physician, "what is the trouble?" "The trouble!" replied the man. "Trouble enough! You see, Doctor, we own an old-fashioned clock that has stood on our mantle-piece for years. It has not been touched all that time. Its works are dusty and its case defaced by time. Would you believe it, Doctor, to-night after I had retired—that is, wife and I—all at once the old clock started up and struck the hour of 12. Of course, Doctor, that meant my time had come, or a warning that I must soon die. What shall I do, Doctor?" and the man moaned and rocked to and fro while the wife wept to see her husband so affected. The physician said he didn't see how any prescription he could give would put off the fatal hour, but the man insisted, and finally the doctor gave him a prescription for bromide of potassium, with which the man and wife departed somewhat consoled.—Portland (Me.) Press.

Mark Twain and the Lady Passenger.

Mark Twain says: I got into the cars and took a seat in juxtaposition to a female. That female's face was a perfect insurance company—it insured her against ever getting married to anybody but a blind man. Her mouth looked like a crack in a dried lemon, and there was no more expression in her face than there is in a cup of cold custard. She appeared as though she had been through one famine and had got about two-thirds through another. She was old enough to be great-grandmother to Mary that had the little lamb. She was chewing prize popcorn, and carried a yellow rose, while a bandbox and a cotton umbrella nestled sweetly by her side. I couldn't guess whether she was on a mission of charity or going West to start a sawmill. I was full of curiosity to hear her speak, so I said:

"The exigencies of the times require great circumspection in a person who is traveling?"

Says she, "What?"

Says I, "The orb of day shines resplendent in the vault above."

She hitched around uneasy-like; then she raised her umbrella and said, "I don't want any of your sass—get out!" And I got out.

A Conundrum.

An eloquent Irish lawyer, named Henn, had the following conundrum proposed to him.—

"Why should the captain of a ship never be at a loss for an egg?"

The riddle was a new one to all present, and Henn was the only person who solved it.

"Because he can ai[illegible]s lay to" (lay two).

"How came you to guess that?" he was asked.

To which question he promptly replied.—

"Who had a better right to guess it than a Henn?"

Henn was counsel for a Mr. Leader, and portrayed the injury his client suffered in such pathetic words as caused the plaintiff to shed tears. On being asked what had occurred to make him cry, he said.

"Oh, though I knew I was wronged, I did not know to what extent I was injured until Mr. Henn stated my case."

Not Up in French.

The young preacher was well up in his Latin, his Greek and his Hebrew. But somehow or other his French had been neglected, as they did not study it at the theological seminary. Therefore he was not equal to the task when æsthetic young ladies of his church sent him a notice about the fair they were going to have, and asked him to publish it from his pulpit. These dear creatures were not satisfied with having a lunch counter or an eating room. They must needs give the department its French name, and so they called it a "cafe," with the accent on the final e. The good parson knew nothing about this way of pronouncing the word, and so, instead of saying that there would be a "calfey" in connection with the fair, he announced that there would be a "calf," making the word rhyme with the laugh which speedily appeared on the countenance of the congregation.

Mating.

A New York clergyman, in a sermon on courtship and marriage, said he believed that "there is a mate for everyone if they will but wait till the right one comes along." The female portion of his congregation who have passed two score years said they never heard such nonsense, and that the man didn't know what he was talking about. If the right one doesn't come along before a woman reaches 40 the chances are nine in ten that he is snowed under, or dead, or, worse still, has married the wrong woman.—Norristown Herald.

Darwin, in his new book, estimates that there are in gardens 53,767 worms to the acre. This tallies with our count when we were digging garden and didn't care a nickel about finding worms; but when we wanted bait for fishing, the garden didn't pan out a dozen worms to the acre. They had all emigrated to the garden of some other fellow who never goes a-fishing.

Mother Died of Salt Rheum.

J. W. Adams, Newark, Ohio, says: "Cuticura Remedies are the greatest medicines on earth. Had the worst case of Salt Rheum in this country.—My mother had it twenty years, and in fact died from it. I believe Cuticura would have saved her life. My arms, breast and head were covered for three years, which nothing relieved or cured until I used the Cuticura Remedies.

Instructive Experiments.

It will be news to most people that ordinary gas will pass through stone work, and that the human breath can be sent through a brick wall so strongly as to deflect a candle on the other side. At the New York Academy of Sciences lately Prof. Doremus demonstrated the truth of these things. He had before him a piece of sandstone, rectangular, and 4½ inches in thickness. Placing against this a tube, he passed gas from one of the street pipes against the brick. After waiting a few minutes he put a light against the other face of the sandstone and immediately a small flame sprang up, showing that the gas had gone through the substance. He then took a mass of brickwork, made of best Philadelphia brick. Against one face of this he put the tube, and at the back of it a candle. As he blew through the tube the light was plainly deflected. Very little pressure, he said, was enough to send the air or gas through. Sewage gas penetrates substances with just as much or greater ease. A water trap is perfectly useless, unless there be a ventilating pipe with it; then the water will check the gas, and the latter will naturally seek its easiest way out. The walls of hospitals, Dr. Doremus says, become saturated with disease, and the only way to cure them is to adopt the Hebraic plan and leave not one stone standing upon another. He had found chlorine gas the best disinfectant for such purposes. He had once generated three tons of this gas in a ward of Bellevue hospital, where pyæmia was constantly occurring through the saturation of the walls with poison, and there had been a marked improvement since. The chlorine treatment, he says, should be resorted to every few months in such places.

Census-Taking Under Difficulties.

The difficulties of the census-taker in remote regions of the United States, and even in our great cities, have been chronicled from time to time, but are as a feather's weight compared with the burden borne by those in the far East. In Bengal for instance, the higher caste Hindoos show the greatest repugnance and evade question or numbering in every conceivable and inconceivable manner; the Mussulmans regard the whole operation as impious, and the lower class considering it merely the prelude to new forms of taxation are dumb, or if forced to answer take the first opportunity to make way with the unlucky collector. Where women are concerned faithful returns are impossible. The majority refuse to believe that the English Government will voluntarily place men and women side by side on the same list, nor will any Rajpoot give the number of daughters in his family. In spite of these facts the latest census is more trustworthy than any in the history of India, the figures being below rather than above the actual facts. Neither flood nor famine, nor ravages of any description have apparently affected the increase in the population, which now so overcrowds every foot of soil, that loud demand is made for the immediate organization of some system of emigration toward less populous colonies.

Good Advice.

Statistics kept by oculists employed in infirmaries for eye diseases have shown that the habit of some persons in facing a window from which the light falls directly in the eyes, as well as on the work, injures the eyes in the end. The best way is to work with a side light, or, if the work needs strong illumination, so that it is necessary to have the work before the window, the lower portion of the latter should be covered with a screen, so as to have a top light alone, which does not shine in the eyes when the head is slightly bent over and downward toward the work.

In the schools of Germany this matter has already been attended to, and the rule adopted to have all the seats and tables so arranged that the pupils never face the windows, but only have the side light from the left; and, as a light simultaneously thrown from two sides gives an interference of shadows, it has been strictly forbidden to build school-rooms with windows on both sides, such illumination having proved injurious to the eyes of the pupils.

We may add to this advice not to place the lamps in front of you when at work in the evening, but a little on one side; and never to neglect the use of a shade, so as to prevent the strong light shining in the eyes. This is especially to be considered at the present time, when kerosene lamps, with their intensely illuminous flames, have become so common.

How an Alligator Eats.

An alligator's throat is an animated sewer. Everything which lodges in his open mouth goes down. He is a lazy dog, and, instead of hunting for something to eat, he lets his victuals hunt for him. That is, he lies with his great mouth open, apparently dead, like the 'possum. Soon a bug crawls into it, then a fly, then several gnats and a colony of mosquitoes. The alligator don't close his mouth yet. He is waiting for a whole drove of things. He does his eating by wholesale. A little later a lizard will cool himself under the shade of the upper jaw. Then a few frogs will hop up to catch the mosquitoes. Then more mosquitoes and gnats light on the frogs. Finally a whole village of insects and reptiles settle down for an afternoon picnic. Then, all at once, there is an earthquake. The big jaw falls, the alligator slyly blinks one eye, gulps down the entire menagerie and opens his great front door again for more visitors.—Eli Perkin's Florida Letter.

The other night a professional mesmerizer found great difficulty in persuading any one to come on the stage. Finally one young man concluded to risk it, and the first experiment was with a glass of water, the youth being made to believe that it was alternately brandy, whisky, champagne, etc., and drinking it with great gusto. In five minutes thirty-seven men were on the platform asking to be mesmerized.

A Fargo, Dakota, paper says: To the thousands of farmers who, from year to year, have fattened stock on timothy or Hurd grass, it will perhaps be interesting to know the origin of its name. A [illegible] years ago a healthy robust man living near Albany, N. Y., had imported the first seed of that grass ever brought to this country. The people of the place knew the man's name was Timothy Hurd, and his neighbors, after trying the merits of the grass, gave it the name of him to whom they were indebted for its introduction into the country. Our esteemed townsman, Mr. L. H. Haynes, is a grandson of Mr. Hurd.

Up to Feb. 1, the receipts of the 1881 crop of cotton at all points were 4,504,827 bales, against 4,770,719 bales at the corresponding time a year ago. The decrease, therefore, so far is 266,892 bales. Reports conflict as to whether a greater percentage than usual has been marketed, but it is evident that the shrinkage has been overestimated. The bales this year, however, are about thirteen pounds lighter on the average than a year ago, which makes the decrease a little larger. Since Sept. 1, the United States cotton factories have used 28,154 bales more than in the same period last year, but as the bales weigh less, they have really not taken as much cotton.

Emilie Ollivier, French premier under Napoleon III, has still the sharp, keen eye of early manhood, dark in color and rapid in glance and expression. His hair and whiskers are white, but the face is full of youthful vitality and interest. He is singularly well informed on all that is going on in the world and takes much interest in the United States.

The entire length of the St. Lawrence tunnel at Montreal will be about 21,700 feet: open cuttings on the Hochelaga side 2,500 feet, and on the Longueil side, 4,220 feet; actual length of tunnel proper, 14,780 feet. It is to be 26 feet wide inside, and 23 feet high. It will be lined with brick masonry throughout, except the front, which will have facades of stone. The arch will vary from 20 to 30 inches in thickness, according to the character of the ground to be supported.

A child recently born at Newton Lower Falls, Mass., is entirely deprived of vision, and is without any possibility of its future acquirement. Although the usual places for the eyes are provided with lids, no eyeballs are formed; a cone appearing in one of these cavities and a plain surface on the other. Such an instance is extremely rare.

Gents—I desire to express to you my thanks for your Wonderful Hop Bitters. I was troubled with dyspepsia for five years previous to commencing the use of your Hop Bitters some six months ago. My cure has been wonderful. I am pastor of the First Methodist Church of this place and my whole congregation can testify to the great virtues of your bitters.

A gentleman made up his mind that he would give his wife a pleasant surprise by spending the evening at home. After supper he settled himself down for a cozy time in the heart of his family. He had no more than comfortably fixed himself when his wife abruptly asked him if his friends didn't want him any longer. Then his mother-in-law asked him if he had exhausted his credit. The servant asked him if he was ill. One of the neighbors wanted to know if he had any trouble and was afraid of the law. All of which occurred in twenty minutes, for in exactly half an hour he was beyond questioning range in his club.

What pleases only for the moment, whether poetry, or oratory, or policy, will die with the moment. What looks beyond the moment will live beyond the moment. It is useless to deny that the brightest and fairest fall easy victims to consumption, and equally fruitless to ignore the fact that decline has its origin in many cases in neglected catarrh. Sanford's Radical Cure is a pure, sweet balsamic specific.

It was a talkative Englishman who was bragging of what superior things they had in the "hold country" to everything here; and it was a serious-faced Yankee who said: "Well I will allow that there is one thing in England better than we find here,—there is a much better class of Englishmen there." It took the Englishman half a day to discover that the remark didn't convey a personal compliment.

Lotions, Instruments, and Electuaries do more harm than good. Williams' Ointment absorbs the tumors, allays the intense itching (particularly at night after getting warm in bed), acts as a poultice, gives instant and painless relief, and is prepared only for Piles, itching of the private parts and nothing else.

Read what the Hon. J. M. Comstock, of Cleveland, says about Dr. Williams' Indian Pile Ointment: "I have used scores of pile cures, but it affords me pleasure to say that I have never found anything which gave such immediate and permanent relief as Dr. Williams' Indian Ointment."

ARTHURS' HOME MAGAZINE.

A NEW YEAR —WITH— New and Increased Attractions!

The Home Magazine occupies, and has always occupied a field especially its own. While gathering for its pages from the whole range of general literature, the editor and his efficient co-laborers exercise the most careful discrimination in regard to quality and influence. Nothing is admitted which, in their view, can give false ideas of life, or weaken the bonds of virtue. No matter what may be the reputation, nor how brilliant the talents of the writer, if his moral teachings are at all questionable, they can not find a place in our magazine.—And beyond this, its publishers claim that in its peculiar character and varied departments it is more thoroughly identified with the people in their every-day life and home and social interests than any other first-class periodical.

The Home Magazine for 1882 will be the most interesting and attractive that has yet appeared.

WHAT OUR SUBSCRIBERS SAY.

"The day on which the Home Magazine comes is hailed every month with joy, not only by myself, but the whole family. It is like the face of an old friend."

"I cannot send off this letter without saying how pleased we are with the Home Magazine. We find it next to impossible to do without it."

A TELEPHONE CIRCUIT.

Mr. T. H. Parish, manager of the Michigan Bell Telephone Company, has been in town this week engaged in working up a project for a telephone circuit. A line is now in process of construction from Detroit to Ypsilanti and Ann Arbor, which will be ready for operation at an early day. Another line is being built from Detroit to Toledo and one proposed from Ann Arbor to Jackson and south-west via. Saline and Tecumseh to Adrian. The plan adopted is to take subscriptions of script payable when the line shall be built and in operation, and when the script is paid give each subscriber negotiable coupon tickets receivable for messages to the amount of his subscription. No bonus is required, but a guaranty of a certain amount of business. Saline is asked to furnish $1,500 of guaranty script, Tecumseh $3,000 and Adrian $6,000. The quota of Saline has already been raised and Mr. Parish has secured nearly the required amount from Tecumseh. He goes from here to Adrian to open the canvass there. There is no doubt that the required sum will be forthcoming there, and in that event the line will be built within the coming two months. Branches will eventually be constructed from Adrian to Blissfield and Hudson, and it is quite likely that Milan will be taken into the circuit from some convenient point. This system will give Tecumseh communication with Adrian, Blissfield, Hudson, Jackson, Saline, Ypsilanti, Ann Arbor, Detroit, Monroe and Toledo, including the small towns between these points. The fixed rate for a five minutes talk with Adrian will be fifteen cents: with the other points mentioned twenty-five cents. The establishment of this line will be not only of much use to Tecumseh for communication with other points but it will enable us to secure a local exchange at an early day. Many subscribers could be obtained for a local exchange if they had the benefit of a circuit like the one proposed who would not feel able to take an instrument in a local exchange alone. The enterprise has been so well started that we have no fears of a failure now. This line will be in operation within the next sixty days.

Green's Larger History of the English People.

One of the most brilliant and thoroughly valuable historical works which have appeared in many years is Green's "Larger History of the English People." Fairly ranking with Macaulay's great work in the absorbing interest of its narrative, it excels that in its adaptation to popular needs, in that it covers the entire period of English history, from the earliest to modern times, instead of a brief portion as does Macaulay. It richly deserves a place in the homes of the masses, and we are glad to note that it is now placed within their reach, being reduced in price from $10.00 for the four volume edition of the Harpers, to 50 cents for one edition just being issued by the Useful Knowledge Publishing Co., 162 William Street, New York. They are publishing it in several styles as follows: In five volumes Elzevir edition, Utility binding, 15 cents, half Russia, 40 cents per volume; (postage paid,) and a Model Octavo edition, in one volume, Utility binding, 50 cents, cloth, 65 cents, half Russia, 80 cents, (by mail 15 cents extra.) Numerous other standard works will rapidly follow the publication of this, of which catalogues will be sent free on request. This house sells only to buyers direct; no discounts from their wonderfully low prices being possible to Booksellers and Agents. The reading public wish God-speed to the enterprise, which is under the energetic and skillful guidance of Mr. Alden, late head of the American Book Exchange. The new company sails under the good motto of "owe no man anything—buy and sell for cash. Gold dollars ask no favors"—Mr. Alden thinks it is therefore free from the danger of wrecking by competing millionaire publishers and the lawyers.

ANOTHER enterprising chap now claims a royalty upon every tilting and turning seat now in use in school rooms. He is now in New York, but will visit Michigan at no distant day. He had better secure a strong body guard, or some district will exterminate him, so to speak.

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

Reported that a shoe factory is to be established at Grass Lake.

The house of Dr. S. S. Parkhurst, of Middleville, burned last week during the absence of the family; loss $2,000.

Judge M. D. Chatterton, of Mason, will leave for Europe in May, and will make an extended tour of the continent.

Jack Pepell, a cattle drover of Dexter was thrown from his buggy last Saturday and was seriously but not fatally injured.

The state fish commission introduced 1,500,000 whitefish fry into the cold, cold waters of Lake Michigan last week.

The surveyors on the proposed Ovid & Traverse Bay railroad have reached Ithaca and struck out toward the north again.

The great Perrin will case at Marshall is still on the tapis—and probably will be as long as there is any money left for the lawyers.

The Ottawa county court this week will wrestle with the case of John Anlguire, accused of the murder of Loveless Green last summer.

J. D. Parrent, of State Road Crossing, Bay county, has been arraigned on the charge of murdering Wm. Mitchie, and pleads not guilty.

A Lowell man picked up by the police on the streets of Grand Rapids, in a drunken condition, had nearly $500 with him, which he was very anxious to get rid of.

Mrs. Hall, wife of the late John Hall who was a wealthy farmer near Dexter, died last week, aged 75 years, over 50 of which had been passed in Washtenaw county.

The surveyors have located the line of the Port Austin extension of the Port Huron & Northwestern railroad, all the way to the former place, and designated the terminal grounds.

Jeremiah Youmans, one of the pioneer settlers of Tuscola county, died at Millington, on the 22d. He was a farmer and leaves a family and a great many personal friends to mourn his death.

There is considerable feeling at Owosso about school matters, some teachers having made themselves obnoxious to one faction to such an extent that some of the more advanced scholars are seeking other schools.

There are seven clothing stores and one merchant tailoring establishment at Big Rapids, which leads the presiding genius of the Herald to believe that some of the clothing dealers will carry their effects out in a valise soon.

Z. B. Custar, a man whose name has been before the public of this state for some time in connection with various swindles, has been taken to Osceola county to answer to the charge of false pretenses, or something of that kind.

A telegram to Judge Geddes, of Adrian, from Major Simpson, of San Francisco, completely denies the truth of the story circulated at Adrian that young Charles M. Croswell had been imprisoned there for highway robbery and forgery.

The Mecosta county end of the 27th judicial district having failed to get C. C. Fuller nominated for judge on the republican ticket, has nominated him on a "citizens' ticket," so called, the evident notion being either to elect him or at least defeat Luton, the regular republican nominee.

The reports about Muskegon's small pox scare indicate that Muskegon folks should at once use up some of their sawdust in molding some new men for positions as health officers, doctors, etc. By this means they might get officials who know as much and would not get panic-stricken so soon, as some they have had.

There is much complaint made in Oakland county about the quality of the fruit trees that have been sold by agents of the Smiths, a firm of Geneva, N. Y., nursery men. It is charged that hundreds, if not thousands of trees have been bought that were warranted true to name, which are now represented to have proved to be anything but choice "budded" stock. These complaints come from reliable men, and they freely assert that they have been cruelly wronged in the matter.
